

University students from all over the country continue to add to the cosmopolitan character that Yale has always enjoyed.

"Another benefit which follows from the organization of a club, or an association of clubs like this, is the fact that it furnishes an opportunity for the crystallization and expression of opinions by the alumni of the university upon the broad policies to be pursued in the progress which the university makes.

"Like every good thing in the world, Yale is a growth policy. It is growing more to-day than ever in its history. The expansion in the university during the last twenty years has been much greater than in the previous 100 years.

"It is not true that because hazing has disappeared, because drunkenness is very much less, and therefore, men may not develop rugged practical qualities fitted to resist temptations of after life, and all of us ought to be glad that the material growth of Yale since we were there, has been paralleled by an improvement in the moral tone of the student body, and in the standards set by that public opinion, which is even stronger as an influence in the college community of New Haven than in the body politic at large. The change has not affected the spirit of independence, or self-reliance, or democracy that we all like to think of as especially characteristic of Yale."

Secretary Taft adverted to the fact that since the last meeting of the federation he had been honored by election as member of the governing body of Yale. He pointed out that in the evolution of the Yale federation is not now a sectarian institution. "This is official," he said, "for it has come within the benefits of the Carnegie fund as a nonsectarian institution, and it is purely so." He expressed gratification that he had found the views taken by the clerical members of Yale corporation with reference to liberal instruction, particularly in theology, to be broad and tolerant.

Too Meddling.

He said, however, that the corporation pursued the wise policy of not meddling and in leaving to the president the management of the various departments. He stated with approval the Yale method of dealing with athletics, indicating his belief that public opinion would place restraint upon excesses in respect to athletics. He was gratified to see the spirit of appreciation of high scholarship that was displayed by the students at a recent meeting of the Phi Beta Kappa Association.

"We are here to acknowledge the debt that we owe and the gratitude that we feel to our alma mater. Taken as a whole, Yale men are not wealthy. I think generally they have acquired more of influence than of riches, and therefore we are not able to give as much to the university as she ought to have, but I believe that a successful method has been brought about for materially improving the finances of the university."

In conclusion, in presenting President Hadley, of Yale, to his fellow alumni, Secretary Taft said:

"It is now more than a dozen years ago since the Yale men of Cincinnati met and passed a resolution that in their opinion the person to be selected to succeed President Dwight was Arthur Hadley, of the class of '76. This was the first formal expression of opinion from any part of the country. We cannot say that his selection was due to that resolution, but we can take pride in the fact that that resolution expressed the general opinion of the alumni of Yale and of the corporation, and we can take pride in the fact that his selection was a triumphant vindication of our judgment, which the administration of President Hadley so abundantly furfished."

At the conclusion of Secretary Taft's address he introduced President Hadley, of Yale, to the audience. He spoke at length upon university topics.

Other speeches of the evening were "The Alumni Advisory Council," by Frederick N. Hudson, of Louisville, Ky.; "Yale," by W. C. Henderson, Columbus, O.; "Thirty-five Years at Yale," by President-elect Frederick S. Dickinson, of Cleveland.

Aside from the banquet in the evening, Secretary Taft had an exceedingly active day. He arrived at 8:30 a. m. over the Chesapeake and Ohio and was driven direct to the home of his brother, Charles P. Taft. Only his brother was at the station to meet him. The Yale alumni had intended to greet him, but it was learned that their demonstration would give the event a political aspect, and they were with difficulty persuaded to keep away. His greeting was reserved for the opening of the business meeting and it lost nothing in force or effect by the delay.

Following the business meeting the Secretary and other members of the visiting alumni were entertained at luncheon at the University Club.

In the afternoon the Secretary held a conference with Arthur I. Vorys, the State manager of the Taft campaign, and Henry A. Williams, who controls the Taft headquarters in Columbus. It was admitted that the discussion embraced the present political situation throughout the State, but nothing definite was done, and no statement was made for publication by any of the conferees.

To-morrow morning Secretary Taft will visit Dayton, where he will deliver an address at the laying of the cornerstone of the new building of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Monday the Secretary will spend in Cincinnati and in the evening will deliver an address upon "The Panama Canal" before the Business Men's Club.

TO GET OUT OF CUBA.

Secretary Taft Sees the End of American Occupation of the Island.

Cincinnati, April 27.—That the United States Government will withdraw from temporary control of Cuba a great deal earlier than has been supposed, by many was made known in an interview today by Secretary of War Taft. Briefly referring to that country and his recent visit to Havana, he said that the Cuban settlement had proved so unexpectedly satisfactory.

COFFEE DELIRIUM

Child Lies Awake Nights and Talks to Himself.

To be active during the day and keep in good health requires sound sleep at night.

This is especially true of children when mental and physical development is more rapid than later on.

An intelligent mother discovered that coffee was harmful, not only to herself and husband, but that it was doubly so to her boy. She writes:

"For more than twenty-five years I have been a great coffee drinker; have often tried to give it up because it made me nervous, constipated, and I could not go to sleep for several hours after retiring.

"About six months ago I finally quit coffee and began to use Postum. Now we use it three times a day. I am tired, cured of constipation, can sleep all night and do not get those nervous spells. While under the coffee habit I was pale and sallow; now every one tells me I have such a healthy complexion. Postum has certainly won the victory in our house."

"There are two persons especially who have been greatly benefited by drinking Postum instead of ordinary coffee. One, a gentleman who has been cured of dyspepsia; the other my own little boy, was cured of a most annoying affliction, without our even consulting a physician.

"Whenever he took tea or coffee, he would lie awake at night, probably three or four hours, with his eyes wide open, talking to himself and grasping at imaginary objects in the air.

"We commenced giving him Postum in place of tea or coffee. He is now a robust boy and is entirely free from those spells of wakefulness." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

and that Gov. Magoon has so completely succeeded in winning the confidence of all parties there, that he feels the United States can withdraw from Cuba and give those people another opportunity for self-government, not later than a year from the coming September.

Secretary Taft said that while the Cuban parties had not agreed themselves, still they had agreed with him, and thus the coming evacuation of the island by the American troops is a matter of calendar calculation.

GEN. BOLLING APPOINTED MARSHAL

WILL LEAD RICHMOND REUNION OF CONFEDERATES.

GRANDSON OF GEN. ROBT. E. LEE TO BE THE ORATOR.

ACCORDANCE WITH CUSTOM.

New Orleans, April 27.—Major Gen. Bolling, commanding the Virginia division, U. C. V., is appointed chief marshal of the parade at the Richmond reunion of the Confederate Veterans in a general order issued today by Stephen D. Lee, General commanding the U. C. V.

Major Gen. Bolling is also directed, upon the occasion of the parade, to place the senior Brigadier General of his division in command of the Virginia division, and give his entire attention to the "important duty of chief marshal. The appointment of a Virginian as chief marshal is in accordance with the invariable custom of choosing this officer from the State in which the reunion is held.

Gen. Lee also issued the following: "It will be eminently fit that the glorious army of Northern Virginia in the capital city of the Confederacy and on the sacred soil of Virginia shall in some way be associated with the immortal name of their great leader, Robert E. Lee, the hundredth anniversary of whose birth was celebrated with such great affection and enthusiasm throughout the country. The General commanding, therefore, announces that he has selected as orator on the occasion Col. Robert E. Lee, son of Gen. W. H. F. Lee (lovingly named by his Virginia associates as "Runt") Lee, and grandson of the great Confederate General."

The Confederate Southern Memorial Association announced to-day that the eighth annual convention will be held in Richmond from May 30 to June 3, inclusive, and concurrently with the Confederate reunion.

DRUG TRUST LOSES.

AGREES TO AN INJUNCTION AGAINST ALL DEFENDANTS.

Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade Alleged in Suit—Victory for the Government.

Indianapolis, April 27.—[Special.]—A tentative agreement for a decree was reached at a conference, to-day, between attorneys representing practically all of the defendants in the case of the United States against the National Association of Retail Druggists and others, and Addison C. Harris and C. W. Miller, associate counsel for the Government.

This case is known as the "Drug trust case." Of the ninety-two defendants, attorneys representing all but nine have joined in the agreement, subject in a number of cases, however, to the approval of their clients.

In a general way the agreement provides for an injunction against the defendants which will restrain them from the alleged acts complained of in the bill of complaint. It was alleged that they had entered into a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce and in violation of the Sherman law. Various allegations were made against each of the defendant organizations named as being part of a general scheme against those who were not members of the association or who did not adhere to the alleged methods of the associations.

The time for beginning the taking of testimony in the case, before Noble C. Butler, who was appointed special master, is May 7, and those defendants who have at that time failed to join in the agreement will be proceeded against as persons, and the nine defendants who have failed to join in the agreement will be proceeded against as persons, and the nine defendants who have failed to join in the agreement will be proceeded against as persons.

Do You Believe In Signs?

taste in the mouth, dirty complexion, dark rings about the eyes, poor appetite, nervousness, irritability of body and mind, a tendency to be melancholy and low spirited, a lack of energy and ambition, listlessness, carelessness, apathy, general dullness and sleeplessness, horrid dreams and visions are also a sign of constipation.

The injury resulting from constipation can hardly be estimated, and physicians know of no medicine that is more efficient in overcoming constipation than VIS-A-TERGO.

VIS-A-TERGO cures constipation by acting in a mild, natural way on each and all diseased parts of the body at one time; it aids digestion, increases appetite, keeps the liver in a healthy condition, cleanses the kidneys of impurities and keeps all the digestive, secretive and excretive organs in a healthy and natural condition.

The formula from which VIS-A-TERGO is made is said to be the very best in the world. It is composed of seven of the best medicines ever used by the medical profession; each one of these medicines is selected with great care by an experienced chemist, and every drop of it is prepared under his immediate supervision, and can always be depended on to be of the same strength.

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

We offer five thousand dollars to any person who can prove that VIS-A-TERGO is not a formula, discovered by a physician and prescribed by him in his regular practice; the same offer holds good to any person who can prove that our medicine is not put up by a chemist who is authorized by the State laws of Kentucky to manufacture medicine.

Beware of Imitations—Don't Take a Substitute.

MANY QUEER FISH.

FEW PERSONS EVER HEARD OF MOST OF THESE.

Gathered By Collector Who Seeks Only the Odd and Unusual.

[New York Sun.]

"Among the most interesting objects which I have collected," said a collector of natural history objects, "are fishes. A well-known scientist was one time preparing a memoir on viviparous fishes and gave me an order to secure as many different members of these families as possible.

"During my hunt for these fishes I covered the whole of North and South America and the adjacent islands. The most curious fish I found in the streams of the tropics, where it is known as the anableps.

"It is most remarkable characteristic is its eyes. These are quite prominent and each is divided by a horizontal partition into two parts, the upper adapted for seeing in the air as it swims slowly beneath the surface of the water and the lower for seeing in the water. "Another, which I found in the same waters, for long enjoyed the distinction of being the smallest known vertebrate, some averaging about half an inch in length. A fish known locally as the sissauran, and found in Lake Puluzon, in the Philippine Islands, which is slightly less than half an inch in length, now holds the distinction. Although small, this fish occupies a prominent place in the food supply of the natives, who greatly prize it for its tenderness and delicious flavor.

"A curious viviparous fish I found in the fresh waters of Virginia. The female is nearly as large as the male, and gives birth to as many as from twenty to twenty-five young at a time, each one completely developed at the time of birth. As soon as born they are ready to feed and begin to pursue their prey immediately. This early activity and full development are especially valuable to them, as their earliest enemy is their own mother, who will promptly devour them if they do not flee as soon as born.

"A peculiar species of fish which I ran across in Asia, and which is also found in the Philippines, where it is called the terebong, is the ophiophagus. This fish has a hollow cavity in its head, and can live for some time out of the water. Jugglers, both in India and China, exhibit these fishes walking on the land.

"I have seen them carried alive in pails in China, slices being cut from them for sale as desired. As long as the fish retains life the slices are sold at a high price, but as soon as death ensues the remainder has little value. "I once made a collection of flying fishes for one of the German museums. Many people have a belief, which was also shared by scientists for many years, that the flight of these fishes was nothing but a prolonged leap. Later investigations have shown that the fish really does fly. The only thing that prevents it from making a longer flight than it does—about 1,000 yards—is the drying and consequent stiffening of the membrane of its wings.

"A more curious freak of nature is a very small crustacean, found in the Indian Sea, which is able to fly, the only known instance in nature of a crustacean flying. In natural history there is no invertebrate does so. It was first discovered by Dr. Ostroff, a scientist, while cruising in the Black Sea some years ago.

"They have no wings, but to their claws are attached long, downy hairs, and from the tips of their tails hang furry tufts, which look like feathers. After getting up speed under water they suddenly shoot into the air and glide over the waves like swallows, only to plunge into the sea again, their downy hairs seeming to come from the wings of an aeroplane. "One of my most surprising experiences happened in Florida in 1877. I was floating down the Suwannee river in a canoe late one evening, when suddenly the extreme stillness of the beautiful night was broken by a sweet but intensely plaintive strain of music which seemed to issue from the water. "I started, I sat in the boat like a statue, and it floated silently along with the current. I heard the plaintive sound rising and falling like that of an angel, and as soon as it ceased I turned in all directions. Dipping my paddle in the water I sent the canoe in the direction where the noise seemed the loudest, but as soon as my paddle splashed in the water the music instantly ceased, and I heard it no more that evening.

"I was sure my curiosity was thoroughly aroused, and, throwing aside all superstitious imaginations, I set myself to ferret out the cause of the music. After a week's work I found it to proceed from the schools of sea drum, which frequent the Gulf rivers and bays. every other member of the royal family. Consequently, the academicians had to dine without royalty, and the banquet lost its former importance.

"Another famous institution which lies in the heart of the city is the Travellers' Club. His Majesty proposed for membership a certain South American millionaire, who had a very strong admiration. A section of the members were violently opposed, on purely political grounds, to the admission of the South African. His majesty did his utmost, but the opposition persisted, and the King's candidate was blackballed.

"All clubland was agitated. It was a direct insult to royalty, and it could not be passed over lightly. His Majesty and his friends resigned on bloc, and the club was never recovered from the loss of prestige occasioned by the secession. Probably the Kaiser holds the superlative record amongst royalties, and quite recently he administered a sharp snub to Berlin. The citizens of the capital have been complaining about the number of policemen who visited Emperor William and who had to be received in state by the civic authorities. These repetitions not only disorganized traffic, but were very expensive. Besides which, they grumbled, it was not dignified for the Emperor to be obliged to have to humble himself and stand bareheaded before his own subjects.

"So when the King and Queen of Norway visited the Emperor they were received with a cold at Potsdam. Berlin was simply ignored.

"His Imperial majesty's neighbor, the King of Italy, is not nearly so good-looking as his photographs would have us believe. In addition he is rather short of stature, and of which he is very sensitive. Recently he was walking in a garden, when he overheard two gardeners discussing him.

"I can't understand," said one, "how a handsome woman like Queen Elena came to marry an ugly little man like the King."

"The 'ugly little man' returned to the palace in a towering rage, and later in the day a pair of bewildered gardeners were suddenly 'blackballed.'

NEW LANGUAGE

INVENTED BY TELEPHONE GIRL OPERATORS.

Prater L. Collier Interpreted Means Operator Will Call You—Short Speech System.

[Hartford Courant.]

It would be difficult, if possible at all, to trace all the changes in life for which we are indebted to the telephone. They are innumerable and keep increasing. Its influence on language is not yet fully appreciated, and we doubt if all the contributions to the speech of the day have been received. But the enrichment up to date is considerable, whether it be in our own tongue or a new one, developed out of the exigencies of the situation.

Everybody knows that it is to communicate with parties out of town. You call for the "toll line" and confide to the voice of your operator is and what your name is and whom you want and what number is in. These are essential preliminaries. It works this way:

Victim—I want the toll line.

Central—Number.

Victim—This is the toll line.

Central—This is 919, John Smith. I want to talk with Henry Jones, 1191, Barkhamsted.

Central—What number did you say you were?

Victim—919, John Smith.

Central—Whose telephone did you say it was?

Victim—John Smith, 919.

Central—Who'd you want?

Victim—Henry Jones, 1191, Barkhamsted.

Central—Say, what number did you say you were?

Victim—919.

Central—Oh, right. Prater L. Collier. (This in telephone language is supposed to mean, "The operator will call you.")

Prater L. Collier, but there is nothing doing. At last he wakes things up again and gets under way.

Central—Sineas now.

This doesn't mean anything musical, but simply implies that the wire is being used. "Sineas now" is what they call long haul or elaborate expression. In haste or to the less favorable brief and comprehensive answer is simply:

"P" "Z"

That is telegraphic for busy. It saves the wear and tear on several letters of the alphabet.

At last the conversation is had and you hang up your instrument. Possibly you remove yourself from the immediate vicinity of the telephone and settle down to work, when you hear it ring and rushing to reply hear "ten minutes" and snap, that's all. By and by you want to use the instrument again and the voice of central does not sound natural. You ask "Is this Hartford Central?" Being assured that it is, things go about this fashion:

Central—Number.

Victim—I want 1117-41.

Central—Cho number.

Then stillness falls and it is not broken until you call again and get the familiar voice that is in the habit of sharing your voice with you. It turns out then that "Cho number" means "get your own operator" and that the person who intercalated "number" did so for her own personal satisfaction to find whom you wanted to talk to and not with any view to serving your errand. As soon as she learns that she drops you overboard.

In due time, perhaps sooner, you want to ask someone else a question and you call again. The reply comes immediately and you ask your question and resume your seat and say to yourself that the telephone is a marvel of convenience. Pretty soon there comes a ring and Central in a melancholy mood says to you, "Say they don't answer there."

The fact is they answered long ago and it is all over, including the shouting.

Thus does the great invention occupy one's time and thoughts, and aid in the study of language.

NOT AFFECTION. BUT MUSCULAR COMFORT.

[New York Sun.]

A social philosopher has discovered that an act very commonly regarded as an affection of gentility, as found in the manner of holding a drinking glass when drinking from it, is not an affection at all, but really an unconscious automatic act.

This supposed affection consists in extending the third and fourth fingers of the hand clear of the glass when it is lifted and tipped forward with its brim to the lips and while the glass is held there in the act of drinking. No doubt it would commend itself to the eye as a manner of holding that would seem to speak of a refined taste.

But this observer says that really people hold those two fingers clear of the glass in drinking because that is the way that is most convenient. If he says, a person should grasp the glass with the whole hand closed snugly around it, he would find that the net result of this is to hold the glass in a way that is most convenient.

PROBLEM FOR CENSUS TAKERS
MODERN CIRCUS A CITY UNTO ITSELF.
BARNUM & BAILEY CARRY OVER 1,000 ON PAY ROLL.
ALL RELIGIONS REPRESENTED.

The Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth would keep a company of census takers guessing. It is a Tower of Babel for tongues, a panorama of nations, a congress of religions, a gathering of families and clans, and it has six pay days a week.

Ten hundred and sixty-five persons are on the circus pay roll—men, women and children. They come from twenty-two different parts of the world and range in color through the whites, blacks, browns and yellows. Ten of them are Japanese, thirty are French, two are Swiss, twenty are Italian, two are Portuguese, four are Bohemians, six are Austrians, ten are Russian, fifty are German, four are Belgian, eight are Scotch, four are Spanish, eight are Polish, two are Egyptian, one is Singalese, ten are Hungarian, two are Cossacks, two are Burmese, three are Welsh, about 250 Americans, about 500 are English, and one or two are Cuban, according to how you consider the Cuban twins.

The animal part of the aggregation includes about 700 heads, also talls. There are more than 200 horses, thirty elephants, four giraffes, a dozen camels and fifty cages of smaller beasts.

The human part of the show may be divided into classes, according to the parts the members play. There are about 500 performers; 125 bill posters, advertising agents and members of the press bureau; 100 railroad men, known as "razor-backs"; 75 cooks and kitchen helpers; 150 hostlers, or, as they are called with the circus, "grooms," and 314 canvas men, property men, managers, keepers and less important individuals. The canvas men look after the tents, the property men look after the apparatus in place, hold the bars for the horses, lay the carpets in the ring and do other general work. The menagerie men look after the caged beasts. There is, besides, one chaplain.

In religious things, the Catholic, the Roman Catholic, believers in Shintoism, followers of Mohammed, Brahmins and Buddhists, Buddhists, including the majority of the Englishmen, Presbyterians, including the Scotchmen, Baptists, Methodists, Lutherans and Hebrews. Many of them are devout worshippers in their relations to a large percentage of the Christians go regularly to church when they are at home, and attend the services conducted by the chaplain when on the road.

The pay days are divided among the different classes. The circus men draw the money every week. The canvas men draw the money every week. The property men draw the money every week. The menagerie men draw the money every week. The chaplain draws the money every week.

After these come the riders of horses. They are paid from $75 to $125 a week, according to their ability and reputation. Finally there are those who do the aerial work. They are the ones whose envelopes are the fattest for the management thinks they do more than any others to draw the dollars of the public. The salary of Mike, Maurice de Tien, who "climbs the pole" in an automobile, and of Volio, the Voltant, who circles the aerial arch, are the highest in the show.

The circus travels in ninety-two special cars, made up into five trains. Into these are packed the show people, the animals, the gilded wagons and all the paraphernalia of this colorful world. When the circus is on the show ground it occupies fourteen tents, including the "big top". There is one tent of canvas for the main tent, one for the menagerie, one for the kitchen, another for the dining room, one for the dressing room and others for each separate department of the management.

The daily expense of maintenance and transportation ranges from $6,000 to $7,500, but these figures are not so startling when it is realized that the main exhibition tent can comfortably seat 14,000 persons, and that crowds are often turned away.

These are some of the figures of the circus. If Little Sam wants to know more about the heterogeneous travelling town, let him turn to the "Lively Localities" during the Louisville engagement, Monday, May 17, but the agent has before him a copy of the "Lively Localities" with him, and even he would find a few languages that the interpreter wouldn't understand.

FISCAL COURT COMMITTEE TAKES CASE OF DR. SMOCK.

Ten Witnesses Examined—Defendant Doesn't Go On Stand—Believe Charges Unsubstantiated.

The Fiscal Court Committee, consisting of Magistrates Frank Hoffman, Ed Montgomery and R. O. Dorsey, appointed to investigate the charges of neglect of duty brought against Dr. D. W. Smock, held a brief session yesterday morning in the County Court room. After hearing ten witnesses the case was taken under submission and the committee will probably make a report to the court next Tuesday, when it will be decided whether any further investigation is necessary.

Dr. Smock was accused of having failed to make a proper number of rounds of inspection of the dairies in the county in the interest of sanitary milk. It was admitted, however, that his visits during the past five months since the agitation against unsanitary dairies had been in progress had been quite frequent. The dereliction is averred to have occurred prior to that time.

Dr. Smock did not testify, but R. L. Page, representing the county, stated after the examination that he did not feel that a case had been made out against him.

FATAL DUEL

Fought About a Beautiful Model.

GIRL WHO WAS TO WED VICTOR WATCHED ENCOUNTER.

FIRE TAKES PLACE AT DAWN IN ROMANTIC STYLE.

CHALLENGER DROPS DEAD.

New York Special to Baltimore American.—

After a furious pistol battle for the d of a beautiful artist's model who promised to wed the victor in the dly duel, one man was killed in-ly, and the other whose bullet had through the heart of his best and lifelong chum, turned his weapon against his breast and later in the hospital. The young in was one of the many partic- friends who witnessed the fatal at, and after she saw one of her par carried away in a patrol wagon the morgue and the other hurried to the hospital, she walked away un- concerned as from an afternoon

This affair, which has no match in a police annals of Greater New York, occurred early this morning at Ozone Park, a suburb of Brooklyn. The participants of the duel were Vincenzo Sica, twenty-eight years old, and Antonio Tlandino, twenty-five years old, who roomed together at 2771 Ocean avenue, East New York. Both men were artists of considerable reputation in the East Italian circles of New York. The young woman, for whose affections two chums loved each other, is Marie Allegretto, a dark-haired girl of twenty, whose beauty had made her famous in the studios of Naples before she came to America and made herself the favorite of the Italian artists of New York.

The Midnight Quarrel.

For months both artists had been paying devoted attention to the model, and although each knew that Marie's acceptance of the other would be the sealing of his fate, their relations were as friendly as ever, and both vowed that the man Marie chose for her husband would receive the blessings of the other. Both had pleaded with the beautiful model while she was posing for the works that have made them locally famous, to decide soon, telling her frequently that her delay was only making it harder for either of them to give her up. The light-hearted girl only laughed, and said she loved them both so much it was hard to choose.

To the friends of the two young artists it has seemed of late that Marie's preference was for Sica. She seemed to stay longer in his studio than was necessary, and for Tlandino, he could barely induce her to remain long enough for a glass of champagne after she had finished her posing. Tlandino tried to keep up the out-ward appearance of comradeship with Sica, but it was hard work.

Early this morning Sica and Marie were returning from a Brooklyn the-ater when Tlandino met them and chided the model for accepting Sica's attention on a night when she had promised to be with him. Tlandino spoke so hotly that Marie hid behind her escort and asked him to stop. He then espoused her cause, telling him that the girl had practically assured him she would be his wife.

"She must not marry you until I have had a chance to prove my love for her," said Tlandino. "I will fight you now for the hand of Marie, and if you don't accept my challenge you are a coward and unworthy the hand of the most beautiful daughter of Italy."

Sica looked appealingly at the girl and then at his friend. Marie's eyes sparkled as she watched the exchange of shots for her would be the crowning triumph of her life. Tlandino drew two revolvers from his breastcoat pocket and held them before Sica.

"I love you both," said Sica, "but I can't allow you to bound me in a cow-ard before my future wife. I'll take this gun."

Girl Watches Duel.

With Marie walking between them the two artists started for a patch of woods where there could be no danger of interruption. They stopped on the way to awaken several of their best friends and took them along as ac-cessaries. The two artists stepped twenty paces apart and began firing. Each had sent three shots echoing through the wil- derness of the woods before either was touched, then Tlandino dropped dead with a bullet in his brain.

A shriek from Marie announced that the duel was over. She ran to Tlan- dino's side and placed her hand over his heart. Then she arose, and as Sica hurried to the side of the friend who had driven him into the duel Marie arose and said:

"He's dead. Let's go home."

Sica dropped to his knees and kissed his comrade's head. Then he turned up and, thrusting aside his sweetheart's hand, he flew from the spot. In a short time the news of the duel had spread the neighborhood. Many of Tlandino's friends vowed vengeance. The police reserves were also turned out.

An hour after the shooting, when ev-eryone supposed that Sica was miles away, and when Marie was jesting with a new-found admirer over the death of a lover and the loss of an- other, a youth whose face was dis-figured with a false mustache and whose features were enveloped in a muffer, stole up and joined the throng of cu-riosity seekers. He showed his gun to the spot where lay the body of Tlan- dino. Then he drew a revolver, and pointing it to his breast, he died.

"Sica dies with Tlandino," the young artist murmured, when a policeman bent over him.

By a strange coincidence the am- bulance that was summoned for Sica arrived with the patrol wagon that was to carry Tlandino's body away. Sica died a few hours after he was taken to St. Mary's Hospital.

There Are Still Great Actors.

Those dramatists who feel that the art of acting has waned in latter years have reason to take heart from the accomplishment of Mr. Forbes Robertson, whose Hamlet represents the art of acting at its highest. It is a good thing for the modern stage that it can boast so remarkable a player of so complex a part. To elocutionary beauty, suitability of personality and temperament Mr. Robertson unites mentally and the power of characterization. To a proper physical embodiment he joins the potent qualities of the mind, the heart and the spirit. The result is a Hamlet who makes impress upon the finest sensibilities of the spectator. The fact that he departs somewhat from the preconceived and the conventional Hamlet adds rather to the force of Mr. Robertson's achievement than detracts from it. As depicted by him Hamlet is a human with human qualities, not a being aloof from all the world; he is a student and a poet, but he is also cunning and has a sense of humor; he is a man, more of a man than all others about him, but his manliness arises from his mental endowments rather than from physique or manners. As Hamlet grows in humanity he gains in sympathy, so Mr. Robertson's presentation of him makes a strong appeal to the sentiment of his auditor, as his clear-cut interpretation and well-defined symmetry interest one's judgment. And with all the humanity of it and the vitality of it, Mr. Robertson sustains a poetic glamour which enriches the beauty of the performance and reveals how the player of commanding power can be human without becoming gross. His success is that of the man who owns the true actor's genius and the mastery of the art which must guide the expression of that genius. This generation has cause to be thankful that it has an opportunity in Mr. Robertson's Hamlet to see fulfilled the noblest and most exalted possibilities of dramatic art.

The President At Jamestown.

A critical examination of the President's speech at the Jamestown Exposition fails to bring to light any new expression concerning his attitude toward the railroads. He has disappointed the railroad chiefs who were led to believe that on that occasion he would say something to dispel their fears of further antagonism, and to restore strength to the security markets; he has disappointed the radicals, too, who hoped that he would hurt a few thunderbolts at corporate interests.

In proclaiming nothing new the President allows the situation to rest precisely as it was. He contents himself with reiterating in substance his familiar declarations that "the wrongdoer, the man who cheats and swindles, whether on a big scale or a little one, shall receive at our hands mercy as scant as if he committed crime of violence or brutality," that "the greatest problem before us is how to exercise such control over the business use of vast wealth, corporate and individual, but especially corporate, as will insure its not being used against the interest of the public, while yet permitting such ample legitimate profits as will encourage individual initiative," that "this great republic of ours shall never become the government of a plutocracy, and it shall never become the government of a mob." These have a familiar ring; in fact, they are almost trite. The only passage of the President's utterances on the subject of corporate reform which the magnates might construe as hinting, even to the slightest degree, a softened attitude, is this:

"It is our business to put a stop to abuses and to prevent their recurrence, without showing a spirit of mere vindictiveness for what has been done in the past. In John Morley's brilliant sketch of Burke he says especially stress upon the fact that Burke more than almost any other thinker or politician of his time realized the profound reason that in politics we are concerned not with barren rights, but with duties; not with abstract truth, but with practical morality. He especially eulogizes the way in which in his efforts for economic reform, Burke combined unshakable resolution in pressing the reform with a profound temperance of spirit which made him, while bent on extrication of the evil system, refuse to cherish an unreasoning and vindictive ill will toward the men who had benefited by it. Said Burke, 'If I cannot reform with equity, I will not reform at all.'"

(There is) a State to preserve as well as a State to reform. This is the exact spirit in which this country should move to the reform of abuses of corporate wealth."

These words, however, sound more like a veiled plea not to pursue vindictively his friends E. H. Harriman and fellows than the suggestion of a modification of the President's policies toward corporations. The last result of his speech is that he stands "pat," in standing "pat" he makes no more threats. He springs no fresh notions of repressive legislation nor measures of control. So the heads of corporations may infer—for the time, at least—that if they are not to be better off, they are not to be worse off. They know "where they stand" and "where the President stands," and this may give them some satisfaction.

The President's address in this particular is similar in trend to his answer recently given the Illinois Manufacturers' Association when that body begged him to make public an utterance that might restore confidence in corporation securities, relieve the business uncertainty burdening the country and enable the railroads to borrow money for extensions and improvements. He said then that he saw no occasion for changing his views previously expressed and he inclosed clippings from the speeches presenting those views. He stood "pat" then as he stands "pat" now. And in standing "pat" he simply reiterates his allegiance to the "square deal"—which he himself honors more as a text of sermons than a motto of action.

Matthew Lyon and Descendants.

The death of Gen. H. B. Lyon, of Eddyville, which occurred a few days since, awakens many early historical memories connected with his family. He was the grandson of Matthew Lyon, an early settler of the county of that name, and a very conspicuous character in public life both before and after his removal to Kentucky at the beginning of the Nineteenth century. Gen. Lyon was a graduate of West Point in 1856 and served in various campaigns against the Indians in Florida and the far West. When the Civil War broke out he resigned his commission and took service in the Confederate army, attaining before the close of the war the rank of Brigadier General of Cavalry. After the war he returned to his home and, with the exception of one term in the Legislature, devoted himself to farming and other business.

Matthew Lyon, the first American ancestor of Gen. Lyon, was a man with a very remarkable career, who rose from humble beginnings to a very conspicuous position in public affairs. He was born in Widdow County, Ireland, in 1744, and died in Arkansas in 1823. His father, when Matthew was a small boy, engaged in a conspiracy against the Crown, for which he was condemned and executed. When Matthew was nineteen he fled from the cruelty of a stepfather to America. In order to secure his passage, as was usual in those days, he bound himself to the captain of the vessel to work for twelve months. This large class of immigrants were called "adventurers." The captain having no use for him sold him to a Connecticut farmer for two bulls. He served his term faithfully and became a free man, over afterward using as his favorite oath, "By the bulls that bought me." Kipling, who once lived in the part of Vermont where Lyon made his residence, makes use of the incident in one of his "Jungle Tales," "Mowgli's Brothers," in which Mowgli, a child, is rescued by a wolf from a tiger by exchange for a bull. Mowgli, who was reared by the wolves and became their leader, is made to use the same oath "By the bull that bought me."

Matthew Lyon, after taking up his residence in Vermont, served in the Revolutionary War as a Lieutenant and afterward was successful in business, founding the town of Fairhaven in 1783, and building saw mills and an iron foundry. Later he entered politics as an ultra-Democrat, published a paper styled "The Scourge of Aristocracy and Repository of Important Political Truth," and served ten years in the Legislature. During the term of John Adams he was elected a member of Congress as a warm adherent of Jefferson and a bitter opponent of the Adams Administration. About the same time he, being a widower, married a daughter of Gov. Thomas Chittenden, several children of which marriage, as well as of the first, becoming residents of Kentucky.

The history of Matthew Lyon's prosecution for libel of the President under the Alien and Sedition law, resulting in a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment in jail for four months, is well known. While there a prisoner he was elected to Congress for a second term, and went from the prison back to a seat in Congress, hailed as the American Hampden. In the presidential race of 1800 the Alien and Sedition laws were a prominent issue, contributing to the defeat of Adams. Neither candidate having received a majority before the people, as was then required, the decision devolved upon Congress, and Lyon ended the seven days' contest by casting the deciding vote, February 27, 1801, for Jefferson.

In the following spring Matthew Lyon, with his family moved to Kentucky and founded the town of Eddyville, near the mouth of the Cumberland. Here he became a large and prosperous landholder. He was soon elected to the Legislature, and in 1803 to Congress, serving eight years, 1803-11. It was near the close of the last term that he presented a petition to Congress for reimbursement of the fine to which he was subjected when a member from Vermont, but it was not until July 4, 1840, nearly eighteen years after his death that the bill making restitution to his heirs, with interest, was passed. In 1820 Col. Lyon was appointed by President Monroe a factor among the Cherokee Indians, in Arkansas, and when that territory was organized in 1822, he was elected delegate to Congress this being the third constituency by which he was thus honored, but he did not live to take his seat.

Among other descendants of Matthew Lyon who rose to prominence, of whom he had a number, was Chittenden Lyon, for whom Lyon county was named, when formed in 1854. He represented Caldwell, from which Lyon county was formed, in the Legislature in 1823-24, and the district in Congress three terms, 1827-35, being a man of strong mental force both in the public service at the bar.

New York Mob.

As a rule the New York mob may be described as a large body of excited persons unable to screw their courage to the sticking point. A woman is insulted in a street car—perhaps struck in the face by a negro—a mob immediately forms. In its proportions it is vast, and in its intentions bloody. It is dispersed by "a policeman who arrived upon the scene just in time, and bravely beat back a surging mass of men and boys who had been crying 'lynch the nigger,' and would doubtless have strung him up to the nearest telegraph pole."

A baby is crushed by a truck. A mob forms to kill the driver—just as if he had drawn a bead upon the baby at the other end of the block and killed it as he would a mad dog—and heaps curses upon him in angry and excited tones until two policemen come up and restore order.

The near-lynchings in New York are as the sands of the sea, and the near-mob is more terrible than an army with banners until a "copper" with the might of Cyano and D'Astagnan combined with the modesty of a steevedor calmly pushes the infuriated populace out of the way, and calls an ambulance. As a rule the New York mob may be counted upon as going on record against brutality rather than to commit any act of violence—and that is fortunate in any civilized community. But a mob with more courage and less sense than the average New York mob committed an atrocious crime when it almost killed a motorman because his car ran over a boy.

The car was moving down Franklin avenue, Brooklyn, when a boy ran in front of it. The motorman apparently had no time in which to stop. The boy's head was severed. If a skyscraper had fallen upon him it would have been as logical to mob the janitor as it was to drag the motorman off his platform and beat him into insensibility.

Mobs in the South have committed many inexcusable murders, but the "hot blood of the South" sits in the veins of men who have at least some sense of justice. Many negroes and a few white men have been lynched when the law should have been allowed to take its course, but victims of the death penalty, and the crime of the lynchers is not that of murdering an innocent victim of popular rage, but that of killing by lawless methods a man who should be killed by law. There is no defense within the bounds of sanity for lynching any criminal, but to the credit of even this vicious and lawless element in the South be it said, it would hardly be possible to incite a mob in the South to murder a motorman for the crime of being unable to stop a car in time to prevent a tragedy for which no man in his right mind could hold him morally responsible.

Will the courts of New York convict anyone for murder if the motorman dies or send anyone to Sing Sing if he recovers? If they do not make a vigorous attempt to do so the spectacle of an alarming state of barbarism existing in our chief center of civilization will be presented.

WASTE BASKET.

Last Cry In Approved Venetian Millinery.

D. A. R.'s FEAST OF BIZARRE
SARTORIAL THINGS.

FESTIVITIES FREQUENT DURING VISIT IN WASHINGTON.

SOCIETY NOTES OF CAPITAL.

Washington, April 26.—[Special.]—Enter your blue office waste basket, business women, especially a wife, on the top of your head just a bit slipping backward, over the metal skeleton with a thin smear of tulle, stick a rose or a ribbon at random, let a thin drizzle of velvet from the edges run down your back, and you have the last cry in the most approved venetian millinery.

The waste-basket bonnet—that most grotesque nightmare—broke out in its virulence when the D. A. R.-ers were here—not that the D. A. R.-ers were necessarily guilty, poor dears—so much as laid at their door. The waste basket or the jardiniere head-gear only happened to appear simultaneously with the doughty D. A. R. dames and to create as much of a sensation.

One of the spectacular costumes of the season was worn by Mrs. Donald McLean's pretty daughter, Miss Besie, at a reception to the president-general. Miss McLean was attired as though just ready to skip upon the position on their merry names. Festivities have been frequent, still focussing around Mrs. Donald McLean, than whom the nation boasts not a woman more magnetic. Her whole-souled infectious chuckle is a drawing card enough in itself. She has tact and sense, and a strong sense of humor, and faces and collateral characteristics not even excelled by President Roosevelt. She is delightfully approachable, sympathetic, humorous and an artist in dress. Her costumes have been a series of revelations each day of the congress, and a series of revelations in chromatic unity by the flamboyant blue and white sash diagonally across the chest, the insignia of the president-general of the D. A. R., that her predecessors always clung to through every toilet, through thick and thin. Mrs. McLean doesn't get tagged. She recalled a sumptuous canvas of Sarah Jennings, first Duchess of Marlborough, in one of her most picturesque arrangements. Over a long, ample skirted gown of chiffon satin and of a strange blue color, she wore a voluminous, rich, dark blue tulle. Her hat was a cream leghorn hat, simple in outline, with a supremely elegant curled ostrich plume in shaded jacinth red that followed the outline of her head below the brim, and dropped over one shoulder. An armful of American flowers, including a Washington rose, was tucked into the belt. With a costume of brown chiffon velvet she carried pink sweet peas and magnolia. Her patriotic bouquet at the dedication of the Thirteenth Col. portico of the Continental Memorial Hall consisted of roses, bright red and white, and forget-me-nots, vividly blue. In fact, the whole congress was a riot of color. Outside the building small pickaninies essayed a precarious trade in bunches of "ar-beauties," their little hands holding the perky, arbutus so abundant around Washington, grasped in dusky, hot fists, or little tight knots of apple blossom buds, pulled from the garden of the "pickaninies."

"Lady, please ma'am, buy my flowers," was the constant supplication, proffering a handful of bedraggled violets or even plain dandelions. For the "Daughters of the Revolution," as an innocent youngster dupe of these dilligent dandelion peddlers, the legitimate annual prey of the natives. They are expected to buy "most" old things.

One dear "Daughter," with a soul too thrifty for parliamentary philanthropy, sat in her place as delegate from the far State of Maine, the meeting of the Congress and crocheted wash rags for the benefit of Continental Memorial Hall. Women pulled each other's plaids, straight and yanked each others' plaids, "to" with a delightful feminine freedom and esprit de corps in the imposing assembly, before any getting up to speak. There were even many surreptitious dashes of powder rags on noses grown red and shiny in the general stress and obvious mutually protective whispers of "You're losing your side comb," or "your hair is coming out on this side." It's mighty hard for women to be men through and through.

Sartorial Wonder.

The woman, still in Washington, who had the finest furbeles of the bunch, was Mrs. John Miller Horton, nee of the Buffalo, N. Y. Chapter, the second largest of all the chapters. She was a sartorial wonder. Everybody waited with bated breath to see the next revealment from the Horton wardrobe. A yellow satin heavily embroidered in mauve orchids pairs with a diamond tulle and dog collar.

One of the prominent District ladies of the "Daughters of the American Revolution" so enthusiastically applauded Mrs. McLean at every opportunity last week, that she wears her evening members done up in armoire and cotton.

A signal compliment was conferred upon the Daughters in the presence of Mrs. Roosevelt at the reception at the White House accorded them by the President. Mrs. Roosevelt has never before figured at any big reception of an organization, always leaving her liege to his solitary fate. This time Mrs. Roosevelt was supported by two fair coadjutors, his wife and Mrs. McLean, the latter standing alongside of him, standing in an Empire confection of white chiffon painted in clusters of great roses. A big, black, plummy hat with white ribbons, and a white veil from the frock that first saw the light at Alice's wedding. The President kept up a running fire of cheery, individual salutations along the entire richly robed line of twelve thousand that filed by, remembering flatteringly each former acquaintance. Mrs. McLean, with her kindred faculty, cordially greeted almost every Daughter by name, with a heart-to-heartly reminiscence added.

The annual reception accorded the D. A. R. by Fairbanks was greatly enjoyed this year.

Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, sister to Mrs. Adlai Stevenson, a former president-general, Mrs. Scott herself a distinguished daughter, vice president-general, from Bloomington, Ill., and one of the speakers of the Congress, has been entertaining prettily at the New Willard, assisted by her daughter, Mrs. Charles S. Brownell, the very chic and fashionable Col. Brownell, of the White House, one of the distinctive women of Washington society, with her husband, Col. Brownell, who has been so long in the United States and was made at Hoboken, N. J., and it shows was plainly an experiment. The door and window frames were made in New York, carried across the mountains in a wagon and floated from Pittsburgh. The walls have been slightly warped. Every plank in it is from the same tree. The ceiling is of solid pine, and since we have known it, has been the spot where the great men of this country have gathered; so, doctor, do not poke fun at it, for to comment on this building as it is, is to touch with profane hands one of the noblest monuments of ancient history.—Carrollton Democrat.

Democracy's Landmark.

Dr. Holmes sent us a postal card this week from New York, giving a picture of the Times building, eighteen stories high. Underneath was written "The future Democrat building." If the doctor was poking fun at our quarters we think it was uncalled for. For our use we believe the Carrollton Democrat building the best in the State of Kentucky. It has stood for 36 years and never had a single ounce of paint. Hardly a week passes but some relic hunter pays us a visit and carries away with him some mementos of our office. The Democrats have a history known to only the curious who have looked deep into our door, emblem of good luck came out of a bottle brought by Gen. Washington at Braddock's defeat and was brought to Kentucky by Simon Kenton. Simon often said as long as he kept the headquarters of the Indians never to be here. Beats Snake Liar.

Every remarkable for their freakish shapes and odd sizes have oftentimes been brought to the public attention, but all previous records have been surpassed by the lions of Mrs. Sallie Fox, of Carroll county, which are having a showing at the Louisville Exposition. She brought five eggs to Louisville this morning and they are now on exhibit. One of the eggs is in rude letters, is inscribed the word "Evil," another bears the name of "Evil," still another has the word "Evil" in the letter "M." The fourth has the word "Evil" in the letter "M." The fifth represents a volcano in eruption. One of the eggs is a snake, and the other is a snake, and the others are nearly white, although all of them were laid by the same hen. These eggs have been more or less mystified and are unusual. To figure out the meaning of these strange inscriptions. These remarkable curios are on display at this office and may be seen by any one who calls on this paper.—Boyle County Herald.

"HOCH DER KAISER."

[New York Sun.] It was in the spring of 1898, Capt. Coghlan, as he was then, had just brought the Raleigh home from Manila. It was the first vessel of Dewey's squadron to return, and New York gave the ship a warm welcome.

The climax of the celebration was a dinner given by the Union League Club to the officers of the Raleigh. Blunt Root, then president of the club, presided at the dinner. Capt. Coghlan was the chief speaker of the evening.

He told about the battle of Manila Bay, carefully omitting the part played in the engagement himself. By way of winding up the speech he told about the friction between the German Admiral von Diederich and Admiral Dewey. Capt. Coghlan was reported to have said:

"An officer of Admiral von Diederich came aboard the Olympia one day to make a complaint to Admiral Dewey because of his ship's bad luck. He said that the ship was unlucky following the battle of Manila Bay."

"Tell your Admiral those ships of his are just as unlucky as mine," said Dewey. "I wish to make the blockade of this harbor complete."

"But we fly the German flag," the officer replied.

"Those flags can be bought for half a dollar a yard anywhere," the American Admiral retorted.

He told the German officer that a whole Spanish fleet had come at him with German flags up.

"Tell your Admiral—and be sure to state it explicitly as coming from me—that the slightest shadow of any of my rules will only mean one thing, and that will be war. If your people are ready for war with the United States they can have it any time."

"After that they didn't breathe more than four times successively without asking permission."

Capt. Coghlan's speech brought hearty cheers and enthusiasm from those present. Later in the evening he was called upon to recite "Hoch der Kaiser." To the intense delight of his hearers he consented. It followed:

Der Kaiser von da Vaterland

Admiral Coghlan recited the verses in an inimitable manner that brought forth a shower of laughter and applause from the guests.

No newspaper representatives were present, but soon news of the bit of unwritten history narrated by Capt. Coghlan and of its reception leaked out. Then there was a fuss.

STOCKS STILL STAND.

[Country Life.] There are not a few sets of stocks surviving in New England, but I think not many are as well preserved or so interesting as those at Ogham, says a correspondent. These have, as you will see, the old whipping post, with the iron bands for the offender's wrists, of all sizes and heights, so that there should surely be one to fit any patient, from the naughty small boy to the able-bodied rogue or vagrant, or his, perhaps, equally able-bodied

Wedding Fashions.

Trousseaux Are the Order of the Spring Season, and Some Valuable Hints Concerning Them Will Not be Amis.

THE ONLY large affairs of the past weeks have been weddings.

Or, to be strictly truthful, the only large affair was a wedding, Miss Atchison and Mr. Courtney's wedding was the only one to which the invitations were general.

Women always get deliciously thrilled over a wedding, whether it be that of a bosom friend, or a perfect stranger. It appeals to the feminine nature from two points, namely, the romantic and the sartorial.

The bridesmaids' gowns worn at the Atchison-Courtney wedding were the most picturesque and graceful models guests imaginable and were becoming to the wearers.

The "knowing ones" among the people of fashion have gone mad on the subject of long line effects in dress and the gowns for the spring and summer are marvels of grace in this respect.

Lady Modish has a good deal to say on the subject of spring fashions in a New York society journal:

The gods preserve the woman who has decided to model her summer fashions after those of Fifth avenue on Easter Sunday.

Rather let her watch the avenue during these first mild days, for then come forth frocks that are all that they should be.

At a luncheon the other day Mrs. Henry Clegg was wearing a gown that was worthy of mention. For example, it was white, made striking in contrast with brown, a combination much to be affected this season.

Also it had kimono sleeves and indicated what I have thought since the introduction of this fact—that kimono jackets would make their appearance for the street soon or later.

The loose coat of recent seasons and the combination of the kimono sleeve have proved too much to withstand. Don't gasp if you meet your most particular fastidious friends wearing gowns that for shape and line suggest a matinee. She is but a little in advance of a summer fashion.

For verification I point to Mrs. Clegg. One cannot but wonder at the perfect taste displayed in this energetic lady, but one cannot deny that her toilettes are chic and striking—also of the newest.

This coat, of white broadcloth, is cut precisely like a kimono with long armholes, and open under the arms to allow glimpses of brown chiffon over white. It is, of course, open at the front, and the shape of the bottom is such that it is long at back and front, sloping up at the sides. Edges and much of the coat are covered with striking designs in brown done in fine hand and embroidery.

Mrs. Clegg's skirt is a long one, for the lady rarely cuts her height with a short one. Therefore this sweeps. Also it is brown, heralding the coming of suits in which skirts and jackets do not match, though obviously made for each other.

This skirt is a fairly heavy gauge or thin, loosely woven material, with fine brown lines and that with an occasional polka dot. The model has no special distinction, unless that it is gathered instead of pleated.

The brown note is continued in a rather large hat of the same tone loaded with osprey feathers that wave in the breeze.

While on the subject of kimono let me give a word of comfort to short women to whom one is hideously unbecoming. The baggy long line, hanging from a sloping shoulder almost to the waist, is, I fear, I know, but if ever there was a season where individuality and good taste may have full sway it is this.

Short and square shoulders are as much in vogue as ever, and unless you have the figure of a Mrs. Clarence Mackay I would feel the kimono sleeve alone.

A wide girdle was made of the ribbon, fastening at the side with a slender gold buckle. The gown had no collar, and Mrs. Mackay wore a string of pearls.

Two trousseaux are interesting New York at present, those of Natalie Rives and Anna Kountze. Miss Kountze has attained this season the distinction of being one of the best dressed girls in town. She not only knows how to wear her frocks, but more than any other girl I know she introduces subtle and characteristic touches that are always effective.

A frock she wore the other day was one of her trousseaux, an exemplification of the mode of a transparent material over a contrasting foundation in rose color, a most trying tone.

The skirt has three ruffles, and no matter what you hear to the contrary, do not believe that triple skirts are not the thing. They are to be tremendously worn this season.

Each of the flounces was edged with narrow bands of velvet, three in number. The jacket was a bolero showing the same triple finish, and the waist was white, according with the combination of white foundation.

For her wedding frock Miss Kountze is departing a trifle from the conventional for an old-fashioned effect that suits her admirably.

The material is soft liberty satin, and the bodice is to have a very deep, pronounced V, making it extremely long in front and very short over the hips. The petticoat is made by the stuff put full on this opening over a front panel of silver embroidery.

The bodice front is also silver, stopping at the bust line to let in a square front of exquisite old lace.

The short sleeves are very full and drooping, and the shoulder seams are long.

That Miss Kountze likes these deep points in bodices is indicated by her going away gown, also showing one.

The model is princess, but the fullness is so arranged that a girdle is pulled and shaped into a deep point, although it is part of the skirt itself.

The upper part opens over a white front, and the edges of the voile are notched like coat revers just above the bust line. This upper part of the frock is edged with a band of velvet and the top of the girdle, directly in the front, has a flaring velvet bow. There is a little bolero to match.

Miss Rives' wedding gown is princess, and whatever rumors to the contrary may come from the other side of the ocean the princess model is here for another season at least.

This little wedding frock has a draped front in black and on the theory that the back of the gown, during the ceremony, when the bride is in a gossamer of all eyes, is more conspicuous than the front, the fastening is made in the front, quite invisibly, under the drapery.

The spring models that I see in all frocks rarely have a trimmed skirt. The exception to this is in the lingerie dresses that are much beruffled. But silks of all kinds, voile and mohairs are quite plain, unless bands of the same are laid on, either in design or in straight lines.

Some of the models that are gradually being made into long coats for traveling or motoring, but only a natural tan or dark blue or green is chosen for the use.

All the models are loose that they may be slipped over a fluffy gown, if necessary, or even over another short coat.

I can find absolutely no escape from plain and simple. Black that make them you like, wide or narrow, stitched or not stitched, but platted they must be. This is true of all except the lightest materials, such as organdie and silk, and even these are accented-plain.

Having already told you that plain, tailor-line blouses are to be quite the newest points. The cuffs are quite narrow, not more than three inches, and the bodies are much tucked in place of all widths, sometimes a wide one dividing several fine, the vice versa. A heavy quality of plain linen is smarter than figures.

Last Concert

Announced by Philharmonic Society for Monday
Night, May 6.

THE Philharmonic Society announces its last concert for Monday night, May 6, at the Masonic Theater. Mr. Victor Rudolf is to direct, and he has selected a pleasing programme, including the Oberon overture, the march from Raff's "Leonora" symphony, and several equally attractive numbers. Mrs. McCord is to be the vocalist, singing "Anna," by Healey, and Mr. John Surmann is to play a "Ballade et Polonaise" by Viouxtempa. Mr. Surmann is so well known that he needs no words to recommend him to Louisville audiences, and though this is Mrs. McCord's first appearance with the Philharmonic, she has been heard in other concerts and her singing will be an attractive feature.

This coat, of white broadcloth, is cut precisely like a kimono with long armholes, and open under the arms to allow glimpses of brown chiffon over white. It is, of course, open at the front, and the shape of the bottom is such that it is long at back and front, sloping up at the sides. Mrs. Clegg's skirt is a long one, for the lady rarely cuts her height with a short one. Therefore this sweeps. Also it is brown, heralding the coming of suits in which skirts and jackets do not match, though obviously made for each other.

This skirt is a fairly heavy gauge or thin, loosely woven material, with fine brown lines and that with an occasional polka dot. The model has no special distinction, unless that it is gathered instead of pleated.

The brown note is continued in a rather large hat of the same tone loaded with osprey feathers that wave in the breeze.

While on the subject of kimono let me give a word of comfort to short women to whom one is hideously unbecoming. The baggy long line, hanging from a sloping shoulder almost to the waist, is, I fear, I know, but if ever there was a season where individuality and good taste may have full sway it is this.

Short and square shoulders are as much in vogue as ever, and unless you have the figure of a Mrs. Clarence Mackay I would feel the kimono sleeve alone.

A wide girdle was made of the ribbon, fastening at the side with a slender gold buckle. The gown had no collar, and Mrs. Mackay wore a string of pearls.

Two trousseaux are interesting New York at present, those of Natalie Rives and Anna Kountze. Miss Kountze has attained this season the distinction of being one of the best dressed girls in town. She not only knows how to wear her frocks, but more than any other girl I know she introduces subtle and characteristic touches that are always effective.

A frock she wore the other day was one of her trousseaux, an exemplification of the mode of a transparent material over a contrasting foundation in rose color, a most trying tone.

The skirt has three ruffles, and no matter what you hear to the contrary, do not believe that triple skirts are not the thing. They are to be tremendously worn this season.

Each of the flounces was edged with narrow bands of velvet, three in number. The jacket was a bolero showing the same triple finish, and the waist was white, according with the combination of white foundation.

For her wedding frock Miss Kountze is departing a trifle from the conventional for an old-fashioned effect that suits her admirably.

The material is soft liberty satin, and the bodice is to have a very deep, pronounced V, making it extremely long in front and very short over the hips. The petticoat is made by the stuff put full on this opening over a front panel of silver embroidery.

The bodice front is also silver, stopping at the bust line to let in a square front of exquisite old lace.

The short sleeves are very full and drooping, and the shoulder seams are long.

That Miss Kountze likes these deep points in bodices is indicated by her going away gown, also showing one.

The model is princess, but the fullness is so arranged that a girdle is pulled and shaped into a deep point, although it is part of the skirt itself.

The upper part opens over a white front, and the edges of the voile are notched like coat revers just above the bust line. This upper part of the frock is edged with a band of velvet and the top of the girdle, directly in the front, has a flaring velvet bow. There is a little bolero to match.

Miss Rives' wedding gown is princess, and whatever rumors to the contrary may come from the other side of the ocean the princess model is here for another season at least.

This little wedding frock has a draped front in black and on the theory that the back of the gown, during the ceremony, when the bride is in a gossamer of all eyes, is more conspicuous than the front, the fastening is made in the front, quite invisibly, under the drapery.

The spring models that I see in all frocks rarely have a trimmed skirt. The exception to this is in the lingerie dresses that are much beruffled. But silks of all kinds, voile and mohairs are quite plain, unless bands of the same are laid on, either in design or in straight lines.

Some of the models that are gradually being made into long coats for traveling or motoring, but only a natural tan or dark blue or green is chosen for the use.

All the models are loose that they may be slipped over a fluffy gown, if necessary, or even over another short coat.

I can find absolutely no escape from plain and simple. Black that make them you like, wide or narrow, stitched or not stitched, but platted they must be. This is true of all except the lightest materials, such as organdie and silk, and even these are accented-plain.

Having already told you that plain, tailor-line blouses are to be quite the newest points. The cuffs are quite narrow, not more than three inches, and the bodies are much tucked in place of all widths, sometimes a wide one dividing several fine, the vice versa. A heavy quality of plain linen is smarter than figures.

with gold, hatpins galore, gold bon-bon spoons, gold berry spoons, gold belt buckles, necklaces, candlesticks, and every conceivable thing of the jeweler's art was sent with heartfelt congratulations.

One of the most appreciated of all was a huge bunch of yellow roses, sent by a very dear friend of her father's, Judge Alvin Duval, for many years Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky.

The amusing presents were captivating in the extreme, and threw the company into shrieks of laughter.

A demure and roguish young woman entered with a suggestive looking fishwife pole strung with lanterns (which was a novel and happy way of "looking up an honest man"). Behind her came one young man with a big yellow cat in a gilt cage, both decked with yellow ribbon. Then a small canary in a tiny gold cage, a tempting looking yellow "tea pot" were among the happy thoughts sent.

FELIX FELTNER'S FINE

PAID BY HIS SON.

Last of $3,465 Turned Into Court—Sells Farm To Meet the Obligation.

Winchester, Ky., April 27. [Special.]—Win. Feltner, of Leslie county, was here to-day and paid to the Circuit Court the remainder of the fine assessed against his father, Felix Feltner, for contempt of court in running off witnesses in the Marcus-Hargis damage suit. With interest and cost this fine amounted to $3,465. The verdict also imposed imprisonment in the county jail at hard labor for two years, but a petition is being circulated asking Gov. Beckham to remit this portion of the penalty, and it is being numerously signed.

Feltner recently sold his farm, said to be the best one in Leslie county, for $8,750. The mandate of the Court of Appeals affirming the decision of the Circuit Court, by which E. F. French was fined $5,000 for the same offense, was filed in the Circuit Court, but nothing more will probably be done about the matter until the next term, which meets in September.

Don't waste time experimenting with electrolysis, X-ray, and depilatories. These are offered you on the BARE WORD of the operators and manufacturers. DeMiracle is not. ## A DROWSY DAY AT SCHOOL.

It was a hot, sultry, drowsy day; yes it was, the children thought. The clouds hung about the sky. All of the children were sleepy and drowsy. The kind teacher tried to make them learn, but they would not.

"I don't think we ought to have any school to-day," said Alice Lee to Marie McDonald. "I don't, either," answered Marie.

"What is that you say?" asked the teacher, who had heard their loud whispering.

"I only said I didn't think we ought to have school to-day," answered Alice, sharply.

At last dinner-time came around. When the children were out they whooped and hallooed like wild Indians.

"I intend going home to dinner," said George Rogers.

"So do I," said his sister Helen, "and I will go."

The teacher heard her and said: "No you won't go home, either."

He then walked away and said nothing more.

At last school was out and the children were very glad to go home. Some of them said they would never come to school again on a day like that.

RUBY'S PLANTING DAY.

"What do they mean by planting day, mother?" said Ruby.

"A planting day, my child? Why, it is a day to plant flower seeds and vegetable seeds."

"When planting day comes you may get some seeds and plant them."

"Well, mother, how do you plant them?"

"My dear, such a question. You know that they are buried in the ground and have to be watered and watched."

Planting day soon came and Ruby could not understand what planting meant after all her mother had told her.

Ruby's mother got some seeds and told her to go out and sow them.

She said: "Mother, where is my needle?"

She carried it home, saying as she limped along: "If it had not been for you, pretty bell, I would not have found fairyland nor know where my two boys had gone."

When she died she gave the Christmas bell to her boys to remember their first Christmas by.

THE MOUSE AT SCHOOL.

Yesterday a mouse was in our school. It was a small one, and one of the girls said: "May I have it for a pet?"

She had a little pasteboard box, and she put the little thing in it. The teacher set it on her desk, and said: "It will be a fine pet for you, Mary, and you must keep it fed well."

So Mary gave the mouse milk and cheese to eat, and when she went home that day she told her mother of the little mouse in school.

The mother of the little girl kept the mouse, and when it grew up she would let it run about the house. She kept it until one day a big tom cat came to see us and ate my little pet.

THE HOLLY BOY.

He was standing on the corner of Fourth and Walnut, crying softly to himself. Then he looked up and called: "Holly, Holly!" But nearly everybody had holly wreaths and did not notice the poor little boy.

He had been standing there all that cold, rainy morning and had sold only ten cents' worth of holly. Suddenly a mud-bedecked hat came round the corner, and Walter picked it up. The man to whom it belonged came, took his hat and gave him a harsh "Thank you!"

He put the hat on his head and did not hear the little boy's cry of "help!"

To-morrow would be Sunday, the only day Walter had a little enjoyment. An old gentleman always gave him a dollar on the Sunday before Thanksgiving, and he didn't want to miss it.

He was standing there quite a while when a sudden cry of "help!" aroused his attention. He turned to see an old lady, hair streaming and hat flying, running after a big, burly negro.

"He's got my purse," she exclaimed in anger. Walter ran with the crowd. The lady kept hollering "catch him!"

The lady said this while the gentleman "got your purse?" he asked gruffly. "Oh! yes! see this dear little boy got it!"

Then the loser of the hat came panting. "Got your purse?" he asked gruffly. "Oh! yes! see this dear little boy got it!"

Brownie in Many Lands

The Queer Names He Was Called and the Queer Things He Did the Old World Over.

BY LOUISE IMOGEN GUINAY.

IN MODERN Greece the Brownie was known as the Stochia. He was called Para in Finland; Lutin, Gobel, Pollet, in France and Norway; Niss-goddrange in Denmark; Tomte, in Sweden; Niss in Ireland, Denmark and Friesland; in Finland, Curlicane; Kobold, in Germany; and in England, Brownie figured as Boggart, Puck, Hobgoblin, and Robin Goodfellow.

Often the Stochia, a wayward little black being, went about the house under the shape of a lizard or small snake. He had a way of following the hedges to cows to pasture, and milking them himself, in a calf's fashion, until he had swallowed quart on quart.

Then he went home, uncorked his thieving throat, and obligingly emptied every drop of his ill-gotten goods into his master's churn! How his feelings must have been hurt if anybody criticized the cheese and butter!

The Gobel, of French belief, was a stone-thrower. He was fond of children, and of horses; taking it upon himself to feed and caress his landlord's children when they were good, and to whip them when they were naughty; and he rode the willing horses and combed them, and plaited their manes into knotty braids, for which, we may fear, the stable boy never thanked him. He knew, too, how to worry and tease; and certain French mothers threatened trouble, some little folk with the "Gobel."

The Norwegian Niss was like a strong-shouldered child, in a coat and peaked cap, who carried a pretty blue light at night. For this purpose he rode across the farmyard under the moon's rays. Dogs he would not allow in his house. If he was first promised a gray sheep for his own, he would teach any one to play the violin.

Tomte, of Sweden, lived in a tree near the house. In harvest time he tucked away at one straw, or one grain, until his strength was not much greater than a mouse's.

Little Sisters.

MARIE AND ALINE PRENTZ, WHO LIVE IN BEECHMONT

and's. If the farmer scorned his diligent little servant and made him his tiny load, all luck departed from him and the Tomte went away in anger.

The Niss of Julund, for soft, easy slippers had a great longing; and if a pair were left out for him he was soon heard shuffling in them over the floor.

The unique Irish Curlicane, though he was a house spirit and did housework and ambitions, that ran in his spare minute, when he was not smoking or drinking, you might have seen him, a miniature old man, with a crooked hat and a leather apron, sitting on a low stool, humming a fairy tune, and perpetually cobbling at a pair of shoes no bigger than acorns.

And, as we have seen, Mr. Curlicane was a fortune hunter, and a very wide-awake, versatile goblin altogether. In his capacity of Brownie he once wrecked a hard-earned gold mine, and served him shabbily.

A Mr. Harris, a farmer, had on his farm a Curlicane named Little Wildbeam. Whenever the servants left the beer and barrel running through negligence Little Wildbeam wedged himself into the cock and stopped the flow, at great inconvenience to his poor little body, until some one came to turn the knob. So the master bade the cook to always put a good dinner down cellar for Little Wildbeam.

One Friday she had nothing but part of a herring and some cold potatoes, which she left in place of the usual feast. That very midnight the fat cook got pulled out of bed and thrown down the cellar stairs, bumping from side to side, so that it made her very sore indeed; and meanwhile the smiling Curlicane, with the head of the steps and sang at the luckless heap below:

Molly Jones, Molly Jones!
Potato-skin and herring-bones!
I'll knock your head against the stones,
Molly Jones!

In Japanese houses even, Brownies were familiar comers and goers. They were important and smooth-mannered and serenely set out rewards and punishments as they saw fit. When engaged in befriending comely boys and girls, their faces had, somehow, the ingenious likeness of letters signifying "good," and if they made it their business to plague and hinder naughty idlers, who, instead of doing their errands promptly, stopped at the shops to buy goodies, their queer little faces were screwed up to mean "bad."

In Ireland lived the mocking, whimsical little Fir-Darrig. He dressed in tight-fitting red; Fir-Darrig himself meant "the red man." He had big, humorous ears, and the softest and most flexible voice in the world, which could mimic any sound at will. He sat by the fire and smoked a pipe, big as himself, and belonged to the man of the house.

Robin Goodfellow was the true Brownie of England. He was both housekeeper and mischief-maker, and was said to have a complimentary brother called Robin Badfellow; but there was no need to be afraid of him, for he was a good fellow.

Robin was a Brownie because he liked milk, knew all about domestic life, and was the delight or terror of servants, as the case might be. He was of making a noise and clatter on the stairs of playing harps, ringing bells, and misleading passing travelers; and despite his knavery, he came to be very much beloved by his household.

The Jolly German Kobold had a laugh which filled his throat, and could not be heard a mile off. He was a mischievous little fellow, and he was not to be trusted.

Carried Away to Sea.

The Adventures of a Boy Crusoe.

CHAPTER I.

THE two sailors who had arrived at the island to search for treasure, had heard the story, just as scores of others had, and had hoped to lay their hand on it at once.

It was thought by all to be under ground. When they came to realize that they might dig for years and not strike the spot, their enthusiasm was gone.

For a week they were digging every day, sometimes under the trees and sometimes in the sands along the beach. They passed the days and the nights covering the face of it repeatedly without suspecting the presence of the cave.

The men took things easy after a day of two and made the boy do all the work. When he objected to this they threatened him. As the days passed and they found no trace of the treasure, the men became cross and ugly and seemed to have a suspicion that Joe knew more than he was willing to state. At length one morning Burk said to him:

"See here, youngster, you can't fool us any longer. In the weeks you were knocking around every day, and I believe you came across that box and re-buried it somewhere. You will either lead us to it without any more fooling, or we will try a way to make you."

"I have seen nothing whatever of an iron box," replied Joe. "If one were buried here forty years ago it has been buried for many times, and may have been found years since. Those native fishermen landed here to make a search, and I can't say but what they found and took away the box. If I had my up a box, what would I hide it away for? Wouldn't I have been glad to give it to you to take home?"

"The kid is all right," said Smith to Burk. "The trouble is that we've made fools of ourselves paying any attention to the yarn."

"But you were the ones who told me about it and said you believed it," accused Burk.

"Well, the box may be here, but are we going to dig up the whole island? That was the idea. The two men were no longer friends. Burk refused to let the boy eat with them any more, though he kept him digging, while Smith spent his time sleeping or wandering about. Joe turned to the wild fruits for his sustenance and kept himself busy by the cave. He could not have gone near his cave in the daytime, and he felt quite sure the men watched him at night. Things had gone on for nearly three weeks, and the men had got so they did not speak to each other, when one night Joe heard them having a bitter quarrel.

It was a quarrel of a mile away and he did not go near them. The next morning as Burk came to him, he said: "That lying blackguard of a Smith started off on a raft for the other islands last night, and I'm glad he's gone. Help yourself to the breakfast, Joe was in a tremble at once."

Dependable Designs For Tub Frocks.

IN buying fabrics for tub frocks, the action of sun and soap must be taken into consideration, and delicate colorings must be avoided, unless the wearer can afford to patronize the French cleaner. Fabrics which turn stringy or sleazy from laundering must be tabooed, and certain laces which lose all pattern and freshness in the tub must also be laid aside, however dainty before washing. In choosing a pattern, puffs, intricate shirtings, tucking made in geometrical patterns must be avoided, and simple gathers or plaits be given the preference.

In white goods, lightweight linen, pique, firmly-woven cotton voiles, linen lawn, percale with tiny figures, Swiss plain or dotted, crossbar dimpity, and batiste all launder admirably, but it is not true economy to buy them in cheap grades. For instance, a good linen lawn will last two seasons, but a cheap imitation will become stringy and the iron will push open the weave in the first washing. French percales make the finest of tailored shirt-waist suits for morning wear, and are cooler and lighter than linen of the average grade and at the same price. In fact, a percale at twenty-five cents a yard will outwear a linen at thirty-five cents.

In colors, the finely-mixed or mottled weaves will outwear and outwash the plain, solid-color weaves. For instance, a delft or China blue, shot with streaks of white, will outwear the plain tint. Brown and white mixtures also wear well, and all the new shades of red and pink are shown with dashes of white to insure laundering. Green, yellow and lavender are also shown in plain and mottled weaves, but they do not wash as well as the colors mentioned above, and are apt to streak yellow.

Torchon, German Val, and a good grade of French Val, are the best laces for laundry purposes. Point de Paris, which looks so dainty before washing, loses pattern and freshness under the iron. Cluny, filet and baby Irish, among the novelty laces, clean better than they launder. The newest embroideries for children's frocks are those which show scalloped edges, with a flower or conventional figure in each scallop, in excellent imitation of convent work. Eyelet patterns are still simulated in machine-made embroidery, and are much used for vests, guimpes, yokes, cuffs, etc.

Natural-colored linen, plain or with pretty figures, in scarlet, bright blue or brown, is popular. It launders well, and with a bit of hand embroidery or belt and stock to match the figure, makes a pretty shirt-waist suit.

Most of the skirts for tub costumes this year are plaited. Sometimes the softer materials show shirring, but side plaits are in high favor. For skirts in which a tailored effect is desired, the plaits are often inverted, or stitched down in graduated lengths to give the effect of a deeply-pointed yoke in the front. Box and side plaits are inset also at a point near the knees to give flare and fullness to the bottom of the skirt. Only on the very soft materials like Swiss, batiste, etc., are ruffles and flounces seen. All the stiff materials, like pique, linen, percale, etc., call for plaits.

The jumper had invaded the field of wash goods, and many smart little costumes are achieved by the use of a linen or percale jumper suit with a guimpe of lighter material tucked and trimmed with lace, or when the jumper is in a color, the guimpe is of white. The illustration shows two very pretty ideas for tub frocks. The shirt-waist suit, which might be worn by any age from sixteen to forty-six, is developed in percale at twenty-five cents a yard, with a vest of white embroidery.

The skirt is cut in nine gores, the plaits being so arranged as to conceal the seams, and is laid in inverted plaits at the back.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 5½ yards 27, 5 yards 44, or 4½ yards 52 inches wide, when material has figure or nap; 7½ yards 27, 4½ yards 44, or 3½ yards 52 inches wide when it has not.

The waist is made with the fitting lining, which can be used or omitted as preferred, and which is closed at the center front, and consists of the fronts, the center front and the back. The fronts are arranged in a box plait at each edge and in rather wide tucks at the shoulders, which are stitched to yoke depth, while the back is tucked on tapering lines. The trimming portions are joined to the center front, which, in turn, is joined to the waist, and the closing is made invisibly beneath the box plait at the edge of the left side. The sleeves are moderately full ones, finished with prettily-shaped cuffs, whether they are used in three-quarter or full length.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 3½ yards 21, 3 yards 27, or 1½ yards 44 inches wide, with ½-yard 15 inches wide for the center front and collar, 1½ yards if long sleeves are used.

The little girl's frock shows a pretty combination of dotted linen lawn, at thirty-five cents a yard (and this, by the way, is fully thirty-six inches wide), with a chemisette of fine Swiss embroidery, and matching insertion to outline the jumper-waist and sleeves, skirt is separate except at the center

House Cleaning Hints For Bed Rooms.

ALTHOUGH winter bedding should be washed or cleaned before it is packed away for summer.

To wash blankets, air and beat them first in the sun, then beat with a furniture beater. Then have plenty of hot water ready and wash them quickly as follows: Fill two tubs with water of the same temperature, warm but not really hot. Add to this a little soap with three table-spoons of borax if the water is very hard. Dissolve the shaved soap and borax in boiling water and add to the two tubs of warm water. Lay the blankets in the first tub, and as an old colored laundress describes the process, "sozzle" them up and down, back and forth in the warm suds, putting them between the hands as you would the lace or a chiffon veil, but do not rub them. Then, pressing the water out lightly, but never wringing them tightly, run them into the second suds, which should not be as strong as the first. Let them lie there while you empty tub No. 1, and fill it with clear rinse water, the same temperature as that already used. Repeat the "sozzling" process in the front, where it is out in one with the rest, giving the effect of a long box plait. For the twelve-year size will be required 6½ yards of material 27, 4½ yards 36 or 4 yards 44 inches wide, with ½ yard 18 inches wide for the chemisette, or 1 yard if long sleeves are used.

second soapy water, pat out as much of the water as you can and run the blankets into the first rinse water. Let them lie there until you have cleaned out tub No. 2 and filled that with clear warm water, which gives the last rinse. Then hang them on the line lengthwise, using pins, set close together, so the blankets will not sag, dry perfectly and lay away in newspapers with camphor balls or other moth defenders. The secret of washing blankets lies in using water throughout of a uniform warm, not hot, temperature, and never twisting or wringing the blankets. If you have a very large wringer, loosely set, you can press out the suds through this, but be careful that it is not set tight enough to wrench the nap of the blankets.

If the ticking cases of pillows are dirty, make muslin slips, turn the feathers into these and hang them all day in the sunlight while you wash and dry the ticking covers. The air and sunlight will purify the feathers. Southern housewives always turn the feathers into cheese-cloth bags and wash the feathers, bags and all in warm, soapy water. Follow this by several rinsings in clear water. They should be dried in the house, near a stove-never in the sun.

HEADLIGHTS FASCINATE CATS. A black cat, lifeless and stiff, lay beside the track on the white snow. Beside the body was a bright scarlet stain. The cat had been run over.

"Considering their activity," said the flagman, "the number of cats run over on the railroad is amazing. Dogs are hardly ever run over. With birds and rats and cows and hogs it's the same thing. But cats, right and left, are mowed down."

"I'll tell you why it is. It is because a locomotive's headlight fascinates a cat. Cats prowl by night, and when on the railroad tracks they see the bright yellow splendor of an oncoming locomotive's headlight, they crouch down, and with a contented sigh they wait for the 'lovely thing'."

"The wait for it as a youth waits for a beautiful girl," they think, no doubt, that it will bring their happiness. It brings them death."

And pensively the flagman gathered up the black cat's remains and laid them in a large wooden box.

"There's a market for the skins," he explained.

Easy Exercises For Filling Out Hollows.

WITH the approach of summer and its uncompromising transparent gowns, the thin girl becomes almost desperate.

"What can I do to take on flesh quickly? My arms and neck are so thin and I do so want to wear low-neck and short-sleeve dresses this summer."

This is the burden of many letters which come to me just now. In reply I would say that, generally speaking, it is a little late in the day to think about the need of flesh in juxtaposition to summer clothes. Taking on flesh is a deliberate, long drawn process, which requires much patience. Diet, correct exercises and massage will all contribute to good results, if persevered in.

The thin girl should take quantities of cool, not cold, water, and eat a rich and sweet foods, particularly pears and beans. She should avoid pickles and acid fruit.

The directions for massage have been given so often in this column that I will not repeat them here, but if any of my readers have mislaid the instructions I will be glad to send a typewritten copy on receipt of a self-addressed and stamped envelope. In massaging the throat, shoulders, chest and arms, use a cream or flesh food made according to the following formula:

Tannin ..... ½ Gramme
Lanoline ..... 30 Grammes
Oil of sweet almonds 20 Grammes

Melt the lanoline and oil in a double boiler, with slow fire, stirring till thoroughly mingled; as the mixture cools beat in the tannin.

This is a much better flesh builder than ordinary cold cream, but it must not be used on either the face or arms if there is a tendency to a growth of hair on the skin. Lanoline, one of its chief ingredients, encourages this evil. Now as to exercises. To put flesh on the shoulders, try this exercise night and morning:

Raise the arms to the level of the shoulders, stretched outward, with palms of hands turned up. Bend the arms at the elbows until the hands touch the shoulders. Grip the shoulder tight, inhaling while counting seven. Now hold the breath while counting four and draw down hard on the point of the shoulder with all the strength you can put into the arms and hands, the elbow pointing downward. Exhaling, and still gripping and pulling, count four more. Then loosen the grip slightly on the shoulder, count seven as before and repeat the pulling movement on the shoulder, as given above. Repeat this exercise at least ten times without taking the hands from the shoulders, and gradually increase until you can reach a record of twenty times. Bear in mind that the drawing down movement is made while holding the breath four counts and exhaling on four counts. While inhaling the hands grip the shoulders more tightly. This exercise fairly draws the hollows out between the neck and the point of the shoulder and gives curved lines in their place.

Second—Stand straight with the chest high and the head thrown back. Clasp the hands behind the body, with the palms turned upward and the thumbs touching the body. This position, if taken correctly, throws the chest high and gives the perfect Grecian bend to the figure. Now loosen the thumbs, but do not unclasp the hands, and turn them slowly at the wrists until the palms are down and the thumbs apart and out. Make sure that your arms are standing firmly on your feet; then bend slowly at the waist line, keeping knees stiff, and raise the clasped hands as far as possible toward the front or above the head. Swing the hands back and forth, still clasped, while you count twenty. When first taking this exercise resume the normal position of hands and body after counting twenty. Later on you will be able to rest by merely stopping the swinging motion. This exercise puts flesh on the upper part of the arms as well as on the chest, shoulders and throat.

An exercise that will improve the shape of both the shoulders and arms is this:

Stand erect with hands dropped at side. Inhale slowly, while you make fists with the knuckles turned forward and the thumbs resting against the side of the body. Twist the arms outward until the palms inside the knuckles turn out, keeping the muscles of the arms taut the while. Repeat the motion with all your strength and your muscles tense, slowly raising the arms with each twist, and gradually working them backward above the head and behind the head, and gradually dropping them until on the finish they are behind the body, with the palms outward, the hands still clenched. Count seven for inhaling and four for exhaling, inhaling through the nostrils and exhaling gently through the lips. Have your chest bare when you take this exercise, and watch the action of the muscles. You will be surprised at their daily increase in size and power.

Last—Lie flat on your back on the floor, with the arms out straight at right angles with the body, palms down on the floor. Without moving, take ten deep breaths; then raise, or raise the hands to a point directly above the head, the palms turned upward and take ten deep breaths. Repeat this exercise twenty times and allow no part of the body to leave the floor.

Good Form In Calling Cards.

MANY young people starting out on first vacations or rounds of summer visits, write for information about cards.

"What size do I use?" "What shall I have on my card in the way of an address, the house number only or the name of the town also?" "How will my newly-made acquaintance know the city where I reside?"

Such are the questions sent, particularly by those who will be traveling far from home. In reply, here are some general suggestions for cards and their uses:

There is no pronounced change in size this season. The largest card used is that shared by husband and wife. Next in size comes the card used by the matron, third the card for the single woman and fourth in size, that used by the men.

Pure white polished, but unglazed, Bristol board, with plain, unembellished edges, is preferred. The type may be in the square block text, most severely plain, in French script or in old English. No family crests or decorations of any sort are used, and the full name runs directly through the center of the card, with the house address, "23 West Branch Street," in the lower right-hand corner. A woman can have her day at home engraved in the lower left-hand corner, and a man may have there the name of his favorite club. If he lives at a club, however, he has the name engraved where his home address would come, in the lower right-hand corner.

The name of the city is not given. Presumably if a traveling acquaintance desires to remember you, she will either write the name of your home town on the card or in her address book.

Married women have their husbands' name in full on their cards, thus: "Mrs. James Newton Grey," not "Mrs. Anne B. Grey." The name is engraved in full. Initials are bad form.

A widow may use her husband's Christian name, "Mrs. James Newton Grey," or resume part of her maiden name, thus: "Mrs. Anna Barton Grey."

A divorced woman drops her former husband's surname or retains it, according to the terms of the annulment of their marriage. For instance, the card of "Mrs. John Trent Barton," after divorce, may be either "Mrs. Jane Barton," if she decides to retain his surname, or she can resume her maiden name, thus: "Mrs. Jane Merton," but she cannot use "Miss" on her card.

The eldest daughter in the family uses "Miss Brown." Her sisters have their names engraved in full, thus: "Miss Margaret Lee Brown."

A man's card, whether he has not yet attained his majority or is nearing the proverbial three score and ten, runs: "Mr. James Ellsworth Barton." "Mr." is obligatory.

Young people never use contractions on their cards like "Ned," "Kit," etc.

The wife of a doctor or minister does not take her husband's title. The wife of Dr. James Hudson Brown has "Mrs. James Hudson Brown" engraved on her card. The best form for a doctor to observe is a card engraved "James Henry Brown, M. D., with residence in tower right-hand corner. This is for social purposes. He has another card with the office address and hours for professional purposes. A minister's card runs: "Reverend Samuel Dodge Baxter." If the name is very long, the title may be shortened to "Rev."

Separate Short Jackets For Warm Weather

UNQUESTIONABLY this spring and summer the separate, short jacket is to be the thing, and no woman who pretends to keep her wardrobe up to date can afford to be without at least two of these chic outer wraps. They may vary from tailored jacket to fluffy cape. They may be made in cloth, silk, lace and linen. They may be trimmed with severest of bias bands and folds or with bolts and bolts of lace or braid. They may match costumes in color or fabric or they may present a decided contrast in both—but they must be short, very short and very natty.

The illustrations show patterns for three short wraps which can be developed and elaborated in various sorts of materials.

One is the simplest forms of pony coat, which may be used as a foundation for braid, lace or all-over embroidery. It can be developed in either single or double-breasted fashion.

The jacket is made with fronts, side-fronts, backs and side-backs, the seams all extending to the shoulders and giving becoming lines to the figure. The sleeves are in "leg of mutton" style. When closed in double-breasted style two rows of buttons are used, but when the single-breasted is preferred the coat is cut off at the center and closed either with a single row of buttons or invisibly, the buttonholes being worked in the fly.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 4 yards 27, 2½ yards 44, or 2 yards 52 inches wide, with 4 yards of banding to trim as illustrated.

This design is especially effective in silk for wear with veiling frocks, and in linen to wear over white or colored wash dresses. It can be made very simply in silk with flat braid for binding and silk frogs and buttons or ornaments for trimming, or the various pieces can be taken to a shop where stamping is done and a stamped pattern for braiding be convention upon them. The narrowest of braid is then used to outline the pattern, the work being done by hand.

These jackets done in silk braid are one of the luxuries of the season in ready-to-wear goods, but the home-sewer who braids rapidly can have one at half the price demanded in shops. They are distinctly quaint and old-style, yet right up to date. Sometimes, when the silk pony coat has been braided, it is finished off around the edge with a double ruffle of chiffon cloth or liberty silk, set in between the coat and its lining, which should be the lightest of China silk, with perhaps a very light weight inter-lining of crinoline to give it shape and body. Often, too, these braided coats are set off with double ruchings of black lace, such as Chantilly, or a collar or black guimpe.

Here is where some of the family lace in black comes into very excellent use. Some stunning little coats in this design are shown developed in white linen braided with narrow soutache, or finished all the way round with flat linen braid, the seams and collar and cuffs being outlined with narrower braid and big pearl buttons down the front. Or the collar and cuffs may be of very heavy linen lace, and if the wearer of the wrap is slender, the seams may be outlined with insertion or galloon to match the lace in collar and cuffs.

The second pattern shows the semi-fitted pony jacket, especially suited for development in cloth, silk or linen for wear with semi-tailored costumes. Very often this pattern made up in veiling and lined with light-weight silk is trimmed with silk cording, applied in a somewhat heavy design, the silk matching the cloth in tone.

As illustrated it is made of pongee in a very beautiful shade of blue and is trimmed with plain and fancy braid while the vest is made of Oriental applique, but braiding executed over a stamped design is greatly in vogue and the coat lends itself to such treatment with singular success. Lace applique is well liked for the dressier linen suits and there is a whole host of braids and bandings that can be utilized, while bands of the material piped with contrasting color must not be omitted from the list of available trimmings. For the vest almost anything in contrast can be used or the material itself braided or trimmed.

The jacket is made with fronts, side-fronts, back and side-backs. The vest portions are faced with the fronts and their edges are concealed by the trimming. The fronts also are cut to give the drooping shoulder line and there is a becoming little flat collar at the neck. The sleeves of moderate size are finished with roll-over cuffs.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 4½ yards 21, 3½ yards 27, or 1½ yards 44 inches wide, with 1½ yards of applique for the vest, 6½ yards each of plain and fancy braid.

The third design shows a cape Eton. The garment fits snugly to the figure, thus doing away with the "bunchy," middle-aged lines, which some women dislike in capes. This is distinctly a costume wrap and looks best when developed in the same material as the skirt and high girdle. If the gown is of cloth or veiling in a plain color, the wrap may be of silk, but it must match the skirt in shade.

This one is adapted to silk, to chiffon wools, to linen and to cotton equally well and provides just the protection needed on a summer day. In the illustration it is made of pale blue radium silk and matches the skirt, the collar being of moire antique of the same shade.

The Eton is made with fronts, side-fronts, back and side-backs and the cape sleeves that are joined together. The neck is finished with a flat roll-over collar and the edges meet at the front to effect the closing.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 3½ yards 21, 3 yards 27, or 2 yards 44 inches wide, with ¼ yard 1 inch wide for the collar.

Many of the new capes can best be developed from kimono patterns, cut short over the arms like an abbreviated kimono sleeve, and in long points back and front. Again, the short wrap is nothing but a bolero, with two deep points back and front. Double and triple capes without any fitted underbody, and capes that are simply broad-shouldered hunched crossed surplice fashion in the front, are developed in silk, nets, veillings, lace and embroidery. Most of the fancy capes and boleros are finished with double ruffles of net, lace, liberty silk or other soft trimming. In fact, plaited frills and ruffles and ruchings are used whenever possible on outer wraps.

Black silk pony coats braided will be worn with black and white voiles, silks and wash frocks; some very smart little coats in stripes are shown for wear with plain silks or cloths, but two sorts of stripes must never be worn in the same costume. If the gown is of striped or check or figured goods, then the jacket must be plain. MARY DEAN.

Refusing To Answer.Question of Local Conspira-

AN INDEFINITE ADJOURNMENT.

Until a time yet to be fixed, the inquiry of the Interstate Commerce Commission into the relations of the Illinois Central Railroad Company with mining interests in Kentucky, and the alleged discrimination of the company in favor of those mines in which it is said to be interested, was suspended yesterday afternoon at 4:45 o'clock. The commission was in session at the Federal building, Judge Judson C. Clements presiding, for two days, during which time twenty-one witnesses were examined. Considerable time was taken up yesterday afternoon in the examination of Louisville retail coal merchants with a view to ascertaining whether they had entered into a conspiracy relative to the increase or decrease in the price of coal to the consumer.

Charles L. Crush, president of the Atlas Coal Company, testified to the contrary, alleging that he fixed the price of coal handled by the Atlas Coal Company irrespective of the prices fixed by other dealers. He said he did not know whether there was a conspiracy among the other retail coal dealers, but that he had never heard it intimated. When asked to explain how all the retail coal merchants of Louisville came to increase the price of coal to a certain figure on exactly the same day, Mr. Crush said he could not, and left the impression on his hearers that he looked upon the fact as merely a coincidence.

Other retailers who were placed on the stand and questioned by Luther M. Walters, attorney for the commission, among them Hush Mervin, treasurer of the O'Neill Coal and Coke Company; Charles O'Connor, president of the O'Neill Coal and Coke Company, and F. M. Sackett, vice president of the North Jellico Coal Company, president of the Jellico Laurel Coal Agency, vice president of the Byrne & Speed Coal Company, a director of the Williams Coal Company and president of the Federal Coal and Coke Company, when asked whether they had any knowledge of a conspiracy among the retailers relative to the increase or decrease in the price of coal, declined to answer on advice of their attorneys. As a result of their refusal it is probable that a petition will be directed from the commission to Judge Walter Evans, of the Federal Court, asking that he require the men to answer.

Petty Grafting Charged.

The most sensational testimony of the day was that of William Eads, owner of the Woodson mine at Hillsdale, who alleged that Samuel Cates, a conductor in the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, had demanded a bribe from him in return for certain favors connected with the distribution of coal cars. He asserted that he had previously permitted Cates to levy upon his store to the extent of groceries and clothing, but that when it came to the mine proposition he balked. He alleged that the discrimination of the railroad against his mine had shut him out of the Southern territory, and had caused a big financial loss.

Later in the day A. H. Egan, division superintendent of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, testified that Cates was not in a position to aid Eads in the matter of coal car distribution, and that he could not have discriminated against the coal operator had he so desired. He said that after receiving a letter from Eads wherein the latter intimated that certain attaches of the company were levying tribute upon him for certain favors, he started an investigation. He further asserted that within the last four weeks he had heard that Eads had attempted with cigars to bribe another employee of the railroad company in return for favors.

How Cars Are Divided.

Probably the most important witness, from the standpoint of the railroad company, to testify yesterday was J. M. Daly, chief car accountant of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. He went into details concerning the method of distributing coal cars by the Illinois Central. He said that the number of cars distributed to each operator was based upon the total output of all Kentucky coal mines along the route of the Illinois Central road, and that a certain per cent. of all the company's cars were distributed to each operator in proportion to the daily output of his mine. He admitted that the railroad company is at fault in not having a sufficient number of terminals, but attributed the shortage of cars largely to the fact that too many privileges are granted the consignees, many of whom have no warehouses, and as a result make warehouses of the company's coal cars, preferring to pay the company overtime for the use of the cars and allowing them to stand idle on a siding for days.

"Company's Own" Mine Suffers.

The first witness to testify yesterday was J. C. Howe, secretary and treasurer of the Madison Coal Corporation of Illinois, according to the testimony brought out during the first day's hearing, this is the company which is controlled by the officials of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. When asked whether his company pays full rates for the transportation of its mining products, Mr. Howe replied that it did. He denied that there were any rebates or drawbacks allowed his company by the railroad company. Mr. Walters, attorney for the commission, asked Mr. Howe whether there had ever been a car shortage at his mines, and he replied in the affirmative. He asserted that the shortage was frequently very serious and that he had frequently made complaints to the officials of the road. He asserted that he had orders from the South last year which he could not fill on account of the car shortage, but when asked whether he had to cancel any contracts because of the shortage of cars, stated that he failed to recall any such.

Balks On Mule Proposition.

William Eads was the second witness. He asserted that employees of the Illinois Central railroad had made demands upon his company store in such a way that he was given to understand that unless he acceded to the demands he would be discriminated against in the matter of car service. In conducting the cross-examination of Eads, Edmund F. Trabue, attorney for the railroad company, alluded to the gifts of groceries and clothing alleged to have been given to employees of the railroad company as "bribes." He asked Mr. Eads how long he gave Cates merchandise out of his store, and the latter replied "for nearly a year."

Grafting Has Made Him Poor.

Mr. Trabue asked Mr. Eads whether he had given any of the employees of the railroad company "bribes" since 1904, and the coal operator replied that he had grown so poor that he was no longer in a position to donate to the Illinois Central Railroad Company. He asserted that since he had stopped his contributions his trip had been wrecked through the negligence of the company's agent, and that cars had been run off the track and thus made useless. He said that his mine had a rated capacity of 200 tons, but that it frequently happens that his car allotment falls as low as 40 and 50 per cent. of the pro rata that he should receive.

Mr. Eads was asked to give instances of shortage which had seriously affected his mines, and said that on December 10 and 20, four mines in his immediate vicinity had received more than their proportion of cars, while he did not receive a single car. He gave the following figures for January, 1907:

"The Dovey mine loaded 169 cars, or 84½ per cent. of its rated capacity; the Brownland mine loaded eighty cars, or 66½ per cent. of its rated capacity; the Oakland mine loaded 120 cars, or 60 per cent. of its rated capacity; the Woodson mine, owned by myself, loaded eighty-eight cars, or 44 per cent. of its rated capacity."

Mr. Eads developed the fact, during his cross-examination of the witness, that during the month of January he was supplied with more cars than he needed, and that he was not this by stating that he was hampered in his operations at this time by the high water, a scarcity of miners, and other circumstances.

After asserting that on one occasion the trainmaster told him that the Illinois Central had issued instructions to give preference in the distribution of coal cars to those mines which furnished "company coal," Mr. Eads read a joint letter which he wrote on December 17, 1905, to the superintendents of transportation at Chicago and Memphis, in which he complained of the alleged "unjust discrimination" on the part of the Illinois Central in favor of the "company coal" mines.

When C. M. Riker, secretary of the West Kentucky Coal Company, took the stand, he asserted that his company had been doing a losing business due to the scarcity of cars furnished by the Illinois Central. He further stated that he had been discriminated against, but said he was certain that the company was not discriminating against him. He further admitted that the railroad often brings loads of miners to his place.

Judge Clements asked Mr. Riker when the car shortage began to grow serious, and he replied, "about May, 1906." He volunteered, He said that his company does considerable shipping by river, and that he was not for that fact the concern would be forced to go out of business. J. C. Howe, secretary and treasurer of the Madison Coal Corporation, was recalled and asked what salaries the officials of his company got. He stated that he preferred not to answer the exact amount, but that it was enough to live on. He was asked whether the salaries exceeded $25,000 a year, and replied that they were much smaller. He seemed a bit forlorn when he said it.

It was supposed the entire party had perished, but late this afternoon signals were exchanged between the entombed and the rescuers by means of tapping on a water pipe. To-night, however, the tapping from within the mine has ceased, and it is feared the men are dead from drowning or suffocation.

CHICAGO WINS THE GREAT RELAY RACE

Michigan Takes Four-Mile Championship At Pennsylvania's Athletic Meet.

PHILADELPHIA, April 27.—Chicago, Michigan and Columbia carried off the honors in the three classic events at the meet today on Franklin field. The national championship one mile relay was won by Chicago from Pennsylvania, her only opponent. Michigan took the four-mile championship in easy fashion, and the two-mile championship went to Columbia after a hard struggle.

No records were broken, but the thirty-seven events, in which there were close to 1,100 contestants, furnished high-class sport for the more than 15,000 spectators.

In the one-mile relay championship Pennsylvania was without the service of Taylor, the great quarter-mile. Chicago took the lead in the first relay and held it, winning by about fifteen yards.

The four-mile race was a procession, the crack Michigan team never being headed by Pennsylvania, the only other team entered.

Hill School of Pottstown, Pa., won the preparatory school championship, and Brooklyn Manual Training captured the high school national championship.

In the 120 yards hurdles, St. Albans, Dartmouth, had to yield the distance in 15.2 seconds to win from Hubbard, of Dartmouth. This is within one-tenth of a second of the world's record, Sumner's.

Relay-National championships: High School—Pennsylvania, first, Chicago University, Time, 3:36.2.5. Preparatory Schools, one mile, won by Hill School of Pottstown, Pa., second, Centenary College, New York, Time, 3:46.2.5.

Universities, one mile, won by Chicago (Quelley, Barker, Lingo, Scerriani) second, Pennsylvania (Whitman, Paydock, Bonacker, Cartmel). Time by quarters, 1:42.2.5, 2:25, 3:25.2.5. Two starters. Two Miles—Won by Columbia, second, Dartmouth, third, Yale. Time, 8:14.5.

Four Miles—Won by Michigan (Maloney, Ramsey, Cox, Rowe), second, Pennsylvania (Laise, Root, Jones, Haskins), Time by quarters, 3:42.2.5, 5:25, 7:25.2.5. Two starters. Special One Mile—Won by Swarthmore, second, Ohio State University, Time, 2:20.2.5.

Special events: 100 Yards Dash—Won by Rulon Miller, Princeton, second, Reid, Amherst, third, Gamble, Princeton, Time, 16.1.5. 120 Yards Hurdles—Won by Shaw, Dartmouth, second, Hubbard, Amherst, third, Colclough, Pennsylvania, Time, 15.2.5. Pole Vault—Won by Allen, Syracuse, 11

SAINTS FALL BY WAYSIDE

Colonels Trim Them By the Close Score of 3 To 2.

SENSATIONAL PLAYS MADE.

Sullivan and Cooley Work a Near Double Steal, But Fail To Score.

BOTH PITCHERS WORK WELL.

NE of these see-saw contests that keep the spectators constantly on tiptoe and everybody in doubt about the finish until it comes off, was pulled off yesterday at Eclipse Park when the Saints of St. Paul hooked up with the Colonels of Louisville in another lap in the pennant campaign. The best feature of the game was that the Colonels finished on the sunny side of the score, winning by the small margin of 3 to 2.

The game was close at all times and abounded in numerous sensational and spectacular plays. One time the game would look good for the visitors and the next minute it was all the Colonels' way. More than once during the contest sharp and brilliant hitting kept one side or the other from making a final score of it and throughout the game interest was high and the final result uncertain.

A good sample of the spectacular playing done was shown in the fourth inning. Suter Sullivan was first at bat and drew a free pass. Cooley, who has been clouting the ball with a vengeance since his return to the field, stepped into the square on the nose, and it sailed down to extreme left field. Sullivan walked home and Cooley anchored in safely on third. Then it was that the infield of the Saints tightened up. Woodruff shot a hot grounder to Timmer and was out. Next, Quinan drove a speedy liner straight at Hase, who flagged him. Hughes looked dangerous and was given his base and Kennedy finished the performance by tearing three holes in the atmosphere. Little Hughes was responsible for the first run. Cooley hit a single. Quinan was on second in the second inning and two men were down. Hughes came to bat and proceeded to place the ball in center for one base and Quinan scored. The third and winning run of the Colonels was due entirely to the good base running of Joe Stanley. He beat out a grounder to Timmer and was out. Cooley scored when Brashear singled over second for one base. Brashear also did some sensational base running in the fourth. He took two bases on Sullivan's sacrifice from Hartzell to Nordyke and slid to third in safety. This was as good as got, however, as Cooley drove a line fly to Frisk, retiring the side.

St. Paul scored first in the third inning. Suter drew a free pass and moved up a station on Smith's neat sacrifice. Cooley, who was out from Kennedy's sacrifice, advanced the runner and Cooley scored. Suter then reached counting territory. The other run of the Saints came in the fifth inning when Smith led off with a single to left. Dunsley popped a fly to Quinan and Suter scored. Woodruff to Brashear. Frisk then sent the ball down to the right-field fence and Cooley scored. Timmer's runner to Woodruff ended the inning.

Both pitchers worked well. The seven hits made off Kennedy were scattered in six innings. The Colonels made the most of their 11 hits, and made their five runs off three hits. The individual features of the game, aside from a running catch by St. Paul in the fourth inning, was the double steal negotiated by the two old foxes, Suter and Cooley. Suter stole second and Cooley stole third. Suter was on second as the result of his single and steal and Cooley was out and as Smith wound up to deliver the ball, Kennedy's fly to Cooley, however, ended the inning without a run.

BUY LOTS!—BUY LOTS NOW!!

No large city ever stopped growing, and no large city ever grew more rapidly than Louisville. Louisville is growing at the rate of 12,000 each year; this means that each year we are adding a population equal to Jeffersonville, Frankfort or Bowling Green. With its growth real estate values will grow. The value of property in the Highlands is at least $10,000,000 greater now than it was ten years ago. Louisville people are that much better off as a result of this advanced value. If you want to own real estate either for a HOME, SPECULATION, or because it is an absolute safe investment better than any savings account or stock or bonds, we want you to consider the five advantages that we offer below. If you want a home, or investment, or to speculate, we have arranged to give you EASY TERMS of payment so that no one, however small their income, cannot get a start. Out of 468 lots sold last year only five purchasers have failed to carry out their contracts.

GET THE SAVING HABIT

West Moreland Place

Lots 30x140, on Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets, between Broadway and Garland avenue; granitoid walks made; price $300 per lot—$10.00 cash and $5.00 per month; only 38 lots left. This is one of the most desirable and successful additions to the city. Twenty minutes from Fourth and Walnut streets, five minutes from Shawnee Park and the White City.

Lincoln Court

Situated at Thirty-eighth and Broadway. In putting this beautiful property on the market, our aim is to make a place that will be to the West End what New Broadway and Cherokee Drive is to the East End. We have made the street of asphalt, put in granitoid curb, gutter and sidewalk, water, gas and sewers. Lots 40x150, all improvements made and paid for. You can take your choice at $25 per foot. No ground in Louisville with the same advantages that can be bought for $50 per foot.

Peerless Court

This is a square of ground bounded by Fifteenth and Sixteenth and Ormsby avenue and Wilson streets; it is in the heart of the industrial center where you can rent cottages at 10 per cent. net to people able to pay. To build cottages, it's the best property in Louisville. To persons who want to get the SAVING HABIT we will take $10 cash and $5 per month.

235 feet on Fifteenth street, brick street made, $12.50 per foot, 235 feet on Sixteenth street, $8.00 per foot; 476 feet on Peerless Court, $10.00 per foot; Ormsby avenue lots, $20.00 per foot.

Reservoir Park and Ingle-Nook

CRESCENT HILL.

In beautiful Reservoir Park we have about 50 lots 50x175 feet each that possess all advantages of this favored section; some level, some rolling, and at prices ranging from $4 to $15 per foot, according to the topography and location.

Ingle-Nook

30x110 feet each at $5 per foot on payments of $10 cash and $5 per month.

Pope Place

This is our new division on the north side of West Broadway, between Lincoln and Grainger Courts.

The improvement of this property begins next week. It will have asphalt street, granitoid curb, gutter and sidewalk, water, gas and sewer and "ENTRANCE REST," making it the best improved piece of property in this growing section. The lots will be 40x200 feet, and restrictions placed in each deed that will insure Pope Place being the best residence plot of the west end. We will sell the first ten lots in Pope Place at $25 per foot.

In buying lots from us you get the benefit of our best judgment as to the most desirable property, as we only handle high-class property that is in demand and has merit. Two years ago we foresaw that property on West Broadway was ready for a sharp upward movement, and began to operate there. To-day there is not a foot of ground down there that has not advanced more than 50 per cent., and will advance more rapidly this year.

WE HANDLE ALL KINDS OF REAL ESTATE.

Spring Suits.

A few remarks to aid selection.

Brokaw Grays.

The name of Brokaw—makers of gentlemen's clothes for over half a century—stands for all that is honest—substantial—conservative and exclusive in fabric, style and workmanship.

Pioneers in the ready-to-wear industry they have raised the standard beyond the finest work of the custom tailor.

The Brokaw Grays of this season are marvels of taste and simplicity—pearl gray, oyster gray, Oxford gray, Cambridge gray—in checks, plaids and a thousand fancy weaves. Single and Double-breasted Sacks and English Walking Frocks with natural shoulders, soft-roll lapel, easy-fitting back, superbly lined and finished to perfection.

Winston Browns.

The Winston ability to interpret styles for young men and extreme dressers is everywhere acknowledged. There's always a little accentuation beyond the ordinary—a little snappy "something" that fits the younger fellows' years and ideas. A "something" impossible to the custom tailor.

The Winston Browns are the fad of the season. Varying from shades of light tans to deep olive browns, showing tasteful overplaids, various checks and herringbone weaves.

The newest is shown in the single-breasted and double-breasted two-button effect; broad, shapely shoulders, slightly body-tracing back, slant pockets, bold, deep lapels, vest showing above coat; without vents.

Trousers cut in full peg shape; cuff bottoms, belts, loops and side buckles. Lined and finished with every kink Fashion dictates.

Another union tailor, Arthur Cartwright, was fined in the Police Court yesterday morning for disturbance about the establishment of J. Winter, Jr., & Co., where an open shop is now conducted. W. R. Spansberry, foreman of the shop, charged Cartwright with disorderly conduct and the latter was arrested on a warrant. Several of the former employees of the company have been fired within the past few weeks because of disturbances brought about by the annoyance of the present union employees.

WILLCOX'S SUICIDE DUE TO DESPONDENCY.

Ex-Railroad President Said To Have Lost Heavily In Stock Market Slump.

New York, April 27.—The body of David Willcox, former president of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Company, who committed suicide on Wednesday, was landed at Hoboken today and given into the care of his cousin, W. G. Willcox.

It was found that Mr. Willcox shot himself in the mouth, dying instantly. Mr. Willcox was in a very nervous condition from ill health when he sailed for Europe a few weeks ago. After reaching Europe he cabled to his cousin that his condition was worse than when he left America. Since then his relatives in this city have had no word from him.

Mr. Willcox boarded the Barbarossa at Gibraltar. Although he shot himself on Wednesday night, it was not until noon of the following day that his death was discovered, when the steward, growing uneasy, forced the door of his stateroom and found him lying dead in his berth.

His despondency was said to-day to have been partly due to financial losses suffered during the slump in the stock market in March. The cares of his office as president of the Delaware and Hudson Company bore so heavily on him in his ill health that he tendered his resignation as president by cable while still in Europe.

UNFORTUNATE FAMILY.

FATHER DIES, LEAVING SON AND DAUGHTER ILL.

Richard H. Bibb Three Times Stricken By Paralysis Before Death—Funeral To-morrow Afternoon.

Richard H. Bibb, of 1739 Rowan street, was stricken with paralysis last Wednesday morning while he was waiting on a customer in his store. Friday night he was again stricken and at 1 o'clock yesterday morning he died. Three other members of Mr. Bibb's family are ill. Mrs. Bibb has been an invalid for some months and her husband's death has completely prostrated her. A son, Lee Bibb, has been an invalid for years, and it is only recently that he has been able to get about. A daughter, Miss Jennie Bibb, was stricken dumb during an illness a year ago, and she is still in delicate health. Mr. Bibb was sixty-seven years of age and was a veteran of the Civil war, having been a member of the 146th Indiana volunteer infantry. For almost forty years he has been in the grocery business in this city. He was a native of Indiana, but moved to Louisville immediately after the war and had lived here ever since. He is survived by his wife and five children, two sons and three daughters, all of whom live in this city.

Funeral services will be at 2:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon at the residence and burial will be in Eastern cemetery.

SCHUMANN-HEINK AND MAUD POWELL IN CONCERT.

Matinee and Evening Concerts Under Auspices of the Woman's Club.

The Woman's Club will present one of the most pretentious entertainments ever attempted by that organization on May 17 at the Coliseum, when Maud Powell, counted one of the greatest of violinists, and Mme. Schumann-Heink will offer the first at the matinee, and Mme. Schumann-Heink at night. Maud Powell will play the matinee recital, with Mr. J. Edwin Whitney at the piano. Of the evening soloist little need be said, except that Mme. Schumann-Heink, in her eagerness to make up to the Louisville public for disappointing them in February, has offered to sing her tremendous programme, the addition of a group of the old English ballads.

The acoustics of the Coliseum have been tested by Mr. J. Edwin Whitney and Mrs. Sapinsky and pronounced excellent beyond expectation, the softest tones of the voice being heard in the remotest corners.

BINGER HERMANN FREED BY WASHINGTON JURY.

Former Commissioner of Land Office Acquitted of Destroying Public Records.

Washington, April 27.—Binger Hermann, former Congressman from Oregon and former Commissioner of the General Land Office, was acquitted of the charge of destroying public records by the verdict of a jury rendered today. The trial had progressed for twelve weeks, and the jury deliberated twenty-one hours before reaching a verdict.

Nothing was heard from the jury after the jury retired at 3:30 o'clock yesterday until 11 o'clock to-day, when word came that it was desired that Justice Stafford repeat his charge to them. This request was granted after brief argument of counsel, and the next hour and a half was occupied in charging the jury. The jury within ten minutes after its second retirement appeared with the verdict of "not guilty."

United States Attorney Baker and many others in the court room congratulated the defendant.

WHITECAPERS WHIP MAN AFTER SHOOTING HIM.

Spencer, Ind., April 27.—About midnight last night eight masked men, first taking the precaution to cut the telephone wires, appeared at the home of John Laymon, a farmer, three miles west of this city, and aroused the family by knocking on the door. Mr. Laymon responded to the summons. As he opened the door he sensed danger because of the masks worn by his visitors, and put up a stout resistance. During the struggle two shots were fired by his assailants, one of the bullets striking Laymon in the breast passing through his body and passing out near the spine.

Rapidly weakening from his wounded condition Laymon was overpowered and tied to a tree, his captors determined upon administering a sound whipping with switches already at hand, but finally yielded to his entreaties and went away. Laymon was assisted into the house by members of his family and surgical aid was called.

Her marriage was with Mr. Mary Carrick. Her husband, who is president of the new Scott County Fair Association, and one son, James, survive her.

SQUIRES LOOKS LIKE A FIGHTER

Australian Champion Creates Good Impression With Boxing Critics.

MAN MAKES NO WILD CLAIMS.

Says He Will Not Be Ready To Enter the Ring For At Least Two Months.

DENIES DODGING JOHNSON.

Comparison of Squires With Jeffries and Burns.

Boxer	Age	Wt.	Height	Reach
Squires	28	170 lb.	5 ft. 8 in.	70 in.
Jeffries	32	200 lb.	5 ft. 10 in.	74 in.
Burns	36	180 lb.	5 ft. 7 in.	70 in.

SINCE Bill Squires, the heavyweight champion of Australia, came ashore from the liner Venture he has been overwhelmed by the warmth of the reception accorded him by the great crowd. Batteries of cameras were pointed at him and he bids fair to be as frequently photographed as any great public official or stage beauty, says a special from San Francisco.

The first thought upon seeing Squires is to compare him with the mighty Jeffries, and of course the athletic invader suffers in the comparison. The same would be true to-day in the case of Sharkey, Choynski and others who have met Jeffries, as the undefeated champion towers above every man in the ring. Taken by himself Squires is readily picked out as a wonderful piece of fighting machinery. Every ounce of flesh is well placed, as though nature had given a perfect model and a set there in shaping him up until the finished product was a formidable ensemble.

Squires was born in June, 1879, and never had a boxing lesson until well in his twenty-first year. In the five years in which he has been fighting he has engaged in twenty-one ring battles and has never met defeat. One fight he won on a foul, but in the majority of them he won by his own prowess. In the last six fights he stopped his opponents in the following summary manner: Tom Funnary, fourth round; Karl Nick, two rounds; Murphy, three rounds; Ed Williams, fourth round; Bill Smith, one minute; Mike Williams, champion of South Africa, thirty-five seconds.

Modest and Unassuming.

Squires is of the clean, wholesome type of athlete and would be a model after which many young athletes, even outside the prize ring, might pattern to their advantage. He is modest and unassuming and volunteers no information about his ring activities, each separate item being obtained after much questioning.

The Antipodean has a strong face, with determination showing in every line. It is easy to understand that when he starts in a fight he gives an opponent no quarter until he has him defeated. He makes no pretension to being a boxer, priding himself entirely on his ability as a fighter. His facial resemblance to Tex Rickard is remarkable.

The visitor is apparently a level-headed chap. While he is willing to learn all he can about the fighting situation here, it is evident that he will be guided by his own judgment in all matters relating to matches. The first shock he administered yesterday was when he announced that he would not be ready to enter the ring for at least two months, and he is to become thoroughly acclimated. When the subject of a match on May 10 was broached to him he feared quickly that that would allow but six weeks in which to train, and he said it was too short. He feels that he is the athletic representative of the Australian colonies and that he has people in his first fight. For that reason he will be as fit as the hands of man can make him.

May Train At San Rafael.

Ordinarily, Squires allows himself but three weeks of training, but he does not know what effect the climate will have on him here, so he will go slowly for a time. He says he must have warm climate in which to train, and for that reason shies at taking up quarters near the beach. He went to San Rafael yesterday afternoon, as he had heard that the Marin county climate suited him best. He had several talks with Tim McGrath yesterday, and Tom Sharkey's old mentor may be in charge of his training camp, once he settles down to work.

While Squires carries none of the marks of conflict on his face, his hand is the trademark of the fighter. When one confidently shakes hands with him his good right seems to swallow up that of the person saluting him and the sensation is that of having it pressed by one of the huge machines over at the big machine shops. The Australian's arms are big and bony and show great punishing power.

Squires denies that he dodged a match with Jack Johnson. He says he had $5,000 posted for two weeks and up to the day before the steamer sailed and Johnson would not cover it.

MAY HAVE FOUND POT OF BURIED TREASURE.

Mysterious Cave In Barren County Raided—Old Coins Put In Circulation Soon After.

Glasgow, Ky., April 27.—[Special.]—While getting saltwater from a cave on the farm of J. S. Harlan a few days since John Miller, a well-known farmer of that section, unearthed a skeleton, and the work was temporarily suspended. Yesterday some parties went to the cave and made another discovery, and one that caused more excitement than the finding of the skeleton.

Everything indicated that the cave had been raided by unknown persons. A pot that would hold a half bushel was found where it had been dug up, and some mutilated jewelry, which appears to have belonged to an Indian. Some writing was also found in an unknown language.

Late yesterday evening some persons, whose names are not known, went to Tompkinsville and disposed of some old coins dated as far back as 1746, but which created no notice until after the cave raid became known, then it was too late to get the names of the persons who passed the coins. A close examination of the money revealed the fact that it had evidently lain for a long time unused, as most of it, though made more than a hundred years ago, showed very little wear.

Chicago, April 27.—S. T. K. Prime, who for twenty-five years was stationed at Dwight, Ill., gathering statistics on crops, died last night in the Chicago Home for Incurables. He was stricken with paralysis two years ago.

First Pictures of "Bosher Bill" Squires, the Great Australian Champion, Who Has Come To This Country Looking For a Fight With Jeffries Or Any Other Heavyweight.

HAT "Bosher Bill" is a great man pugilistically is agreed by the San Francisco critics who have looked over the antipodean heavyweight. It is agreed that although Bill weighs but 185 pounds he is plenty big enough to whip most of the Americans who are shooting at the championship. Bill is said to be a tough proposition all around, being clever, fast on his feet and with a punch that is a knockout the first time.

FINDS GOLD COINS VALUED AT $1,800.

Shelby County Man Locates Treasure In Rotting Log On His Farm.

Shelbyville, Ky., April 27.—John Jones, a stonemason, who recently purchased a small tract of land near Simpsonville, eight miles west of here, is in fine luck. While digging up an old stump on the place he found gold coins aggregating $1,800. The well-rotted remnants of a cedar bucket where the money was found shows that the money was placed with the receptacle in the ground many years ago. The identity of the person who buried the money and the reason for its being hidden remain a mystery.
